An Iowa man has gone insane over the perplexities arising from the question, "When does the twentieth century begin?" From present indications there will be others.

John A. Campbell, who formerly conducted a jewelry store and repair shop in Culver, has returned to this city and will remain permanently. He will establish a jewelry and repair establishment at once in the Zechiel building first door south of HERALD office. Everybody knows that John is a first class workman, hence he will receive a liberal patronage.

A large crowd of people was greatly interested in an argument between an aged lady and a minister at the depot Christmas Day. They discussed the relative merits of the Bible. The old lady could quote scripture like a Beecher, and at no time in the argument did the divine get the start of her. The discussion was concerning the law as laid down in the old Bible, which the lady claimed was just as binding upon the people as the New Testament. Every one present claimed the lady had the best of the argument.

The New Year will soon be upon us, and this issue closes the appearance of the HERALD for the year of 1899. Father time has never let a year pass into oblivion so fraught with historical events; events which will make a new history for the United States, and many changes upon its map. And while we feel that nothing has been done by the American people, but tended toward bettering humanity, we deplore that the war still continues in the Philippines, as it is wiping from the face of the earth many of America's noblest heroes, saying nothing about the awful expense to carry on the conflict. All patriotic and peace-loving citizens hope the affair will soon be settled satisfactory to all concerned.

Enter Bourbon College next term. Expenses are low and instruction is thorough.

Chas. Newman, who lives southwest of town, is not much of a Sabbath school man by the way of attending the same, but is liberal when it comes to donating for any good cause and Sabbath schools in particular. Last Monday evening Charlie attended the Christmas exercises at the Zion Reform church south of town, and when the presents were handed out, he was greatly surprised to receive a sack about a foot and a half long, filled with candy, peanuts, apples and a box of "Little Early Risers" to aid digestion. Charlie thinks old "Santa Claus" is a boss fellow, and hopes he will remember him again.

Wm. Kneobel received a telegram Sunday morning from Lawrenceburg Ind., stating that his mother was dead. Hence Kneobel and wife departed Monday morning for the above named place, to attend the last sad rites, previous to laying the earthly remains to rest. This was a sad Christmas for William, and he has the sympathy of a large circle of friends.

A number of Culver citizens were surprised to receive invitations, announcing the marriage of Mr. Frank Baker and Miss Bertha Boyer, of Fremont, Ohio, which occurred at the residence of the brides parents at noon on Christmas day. Frank was mighty sly about the matter, as even his parents and most intimate friends did not suspect that he contemplated matrimony. The HERALD and his many friends extend congratulations.

The scheme of pensioning old employees of the Pennsylvania, which goes into effect Jan. 1, bases the amount of pension so that it will be equal to 1 per cent. for each year of continuous service of the average salary for the last ten years, which, the officials think, will provide handsomely for any prudent employee.

Very interesting Christmas exercises were held at the Zion Reformed church, south-west of town, last Monday evening, consisting of recitations, songs, juvenile exercises etc. The singing was especially fine. The church was crowded to its utmost capacity, standing room being at a premium. About fifty Culver citizens were present.

Last Sunday evening very elaborate Christmas exercises were held at the Grace Reformed church, this city. The church was beautifully decorated and the most beautiful scene was a representation of the "Golden Gates Ajar." The program consisted of recitations and singing by the juvenile members of the Sabbath School, which was interspersed by excellent vocal music by the choir. Standing room was all taken, but the best of order prevailed, and all present seemed to highly appreciate the entertainment.

There are a large number of subscribers on the HERALD list who owe the editor, and do not seem to care if they do. Now we must have our money or the equivalent. We have fooled long enough. We will send statements to these delinquents and unless they answer promptly the accounts will be placed in the hands of a collecting agency. This is the final warning.

MY FIRE.

It starts;
A sinuous eyelash from the sun,
A golden, leaf-shaped, dancing thing,
Bending fern-like in a magic breeze.

And grows,
And saps the virgin forest's strength
With writhing, biting arms,
And with its red jaws through the gloom
Cast elfin shadows 'round the room.

And waxing still
It lashes 'round the knotted wood
With soft but cruel sting,
Till, gorged with strength, it fades away
Beneath a coverlet of gray.

And now,
Like molten sunset from the west,
Pulsates as with living breath
Till dying midst the bones its greed
Has made
Its heart is still, and ashes mark the grave.

Courting for the Captain.

There was probably no more youthful bearer of a colonel's commission in the Civil War than myself.

Born in a family of soldiers, educated and drilled from infancy as a soldier, I gained high rank as a boy and was able to perform its duties to the satisfaction of my superiors.

But, aside from duty, I was as "lark" as any young college chap in the world.

A box of goods made by the kind hands of loyal women reached my regiment through the United States Christian Commission. The quartermaster, who superintended distribution of the comforts, brought me one evening a note he had found pinned on a pair of woolen stockings. Some fun-loving girl wrote that she would, through charity, correspond with the soldier receiving those foot coverings. The letter was signed "Dolly Miller," and the post office address was given.

I took the slip of paper and when the quartermaster had departed indited a note in my best style to the young lady. The name I placed at the end, though was not my own, but that of Capt. T. B. Reid, in command of one of my companies. A fine fellow, handsome, brave and young, was Reid—a great favorite also with the ladies. He had won his rank by gallant service and was a soldier all through. Though he always could keep up his end in conversation, yet his early education had been neglected. He wrote a villainous list, and all his ideas froze before they reached the point of his pen.

I added a V to the initials of my comrade, so as to identify the answer (if one came) when it reached the adjutant's tent, where all mail matter was delivered.

Three weeks after there was a note for Capt. T. B. V. Reid from a town in Ohio. Of course, the screed was delivered into my hands. A very sweet, modest little letter it was. The contents told that some lively girl chum had written the original and signed Miss Dolly Miller's name thereto; but the real young lady said that "the letter she received was so gentlemanly in tone, so interesting in contents, that she, patriotic in the extreme, could carry out the promise made in her behalf, and if Capt. Reid could find amusement or pleasure in corresponding with her she was willing to do what she could to cheer him in his duties and dangers."

Of course, I answered and "spread myself." No fool's letter would do for this bright, honest Miss Dolly, and, being flattered by her high estimate of my early work, I "put in my best ticks."

It was not long before letters came and went by each mail. I was really interested in the true, kindly maiden I had never met, and had it not been "for the girl I left behind me" might have explained my first deception and gone in for myself. As it was, I felt rather conscience stricken when I found to what extent my gush and romance had taken hold on the dear young lady's feelings. But I kept it up, all the same.

As I "piled up the agony" on the miseries of a soldier's life and gave utterance to a longing for some tender, loving woman to reconcile me to the world and its trials, Miss Dolly's letters became more and more affectionate and suggestive. She wrote that she was an orphan, had considerable money in her own right, and that she could love a brave soldier and honest gentleman, such as she conceived Capt. Reid to be from the tone of his letters.

Still I continued the correspondence, and, forced to reply in kind, I dare say that I wrote many words that conveyed great affection and used much language that could easily be construed into almost direct proposals of marriage, though these were always qualified by remarks showing how unwilling I was, or would be, to bring a young wife to share the privations and hardships of a life in the field.

This interchange of words, growing continually more tender, was kept up until after the capture of Mobile. Then my regiment was sent to a point on the Mississippi River.

During the stirring times of action and the confusion of change in station our letters were in many cases miscarried or failed to reach us. I had not heard from Miss Dolly for nearly six weeks, and earnestly hoped she had dropped the correspondence, for it had grown entirely too warm for my comfort and peace of mind under the circumstances.

One day it happened—as things coincident do happen in this world—that I was sitting in the provost marshal's office at the landing, when a large steamboat came down the river. It stopped at our post, as all boats had to, in compliance with military orders. I saw several passengers land, among them a lady. These were left standing on the levee while their passes and baggage underwent examination.

In a few moments the lieutenant commanding the provost guard came to me and said:

"Colonel, there is a young lady here asking for Capt. Reid of your regiment."

Of course I was all attention and activity in a moment. I never doubted that it was one of Reid's sisters (I knew he had several), who had foolishly come to pay him a visit. I was sorry for it, because our camps were no place for a lady, and there were rather strict orders against their admission.

I buttoned up my coat, gave my cap a cant over the right ear and made my way toward the lovely damsel, who stood among most uncongenial surroundings.

Thunder and Mars! I recognized Dolly Miller (from her likeness to the photograph sent me) the moment I laid my eyes upon her.

Here was a fix—of my own manufacture, too. How was I to get rid of it?

I went forward and introduced myself "with all the courtesy of which I was possessed as Capt. Reid's colonel and his friend."

I had mentioned myself in some of the letters I had written, purporting to come from T. B. V. R., and a blushing look of pleasure came over the girl's face.

"Capt. Reid has often written of you, colonel, and, while I fully expected to find him here to meet me, I am glad that he sent a substitute I can feel in some way acquainted with."

"Did Capt. Reid expect you?"
"Why certainly. I wrote him three weeks ago that if certain matters did not change for the better I would come to join him here, in spite of all the discomforts he so vividly pictured. The matters did happen. I was tormented out of life by my guardian and his son. The latter wished me to marry him in order to secure the fortune now due me, that has for ten years been in his father's hands. I know, colonel, you are aware of my correspondence with Capt. Reid, and I determined to trust my future with him whom I knew little rather than tempt fate with one I could not like, of whom I knew everything, and all to his discredit."

I had to have time for thought and plans.

"Miss —?"
"Miller."

"Thank you. Well, Miss Miller, I know that the captain never received your letter. We have been busy at Mobile and have just arrived here—have had no mail for fully 20 days. Our camp is all in confusion as yet and there is much to be arranged. Will you try and content yourself for an hour or two while I go to camp and notify Capt. Reid?"

She consented to wait; the postmaster's private office was given up to her. It was a pretty but distressed face I left behind me as I rode off, considerably worried about my own part and penalty in the affair.

I went straight to camp, sent for Reid and there was a full hour's confab, a good deal of hard swearing on his part, a power of persuasion on my own, before the matter was settled.

I knew the captain well; he had money, a good heart and no entanglements. He was calculated to make a loving husband for any woman. I put the case strongly to him. Here was an honest but unsophisticated maiden, with money of her own, ready to become his wife. I had saved him all the trouble of courtship, won his bride for him and had her safely housed and waiting.

What more could he want? Would Cincinnati, earnest endeavors on his behalf go for nothing?

Besides, he had always vowed he was in love with the girl, though he had never seen but her picture.

My eloquence gained him over, even as my literary skill had secured the lady. I exhibited all her letters; told, as nearly as I could, the contents of those I had written her, and before two hours had elapsed I led my gallant comrade to his happy, willing sweetheart.

That evening they were married by the chaplain of the — Massachusetts.

Reid at once tendered his resignation, and was given leave of absence pending its acceptance. The next morning our young couple took the boat for he be so ungrateful as to let all my Mr. and Mrs. T. B. Reid (no V in the name now) are happy, rich and contented in Wisconsin. I hear from them often, but neither has ever given me a hint that any explanations have taken place between them regarding their wooing by correspondence.

So my lark in that line turned out O. K. for all parties, but it might have been a terrible matter for everyone concerned. I have never since been interested in any courtships but my own, and in these I learned how serious such affairs generally are.

THE GREAT TREK.

Causes Which Led to the First Migration of the Boers.

It is most important to understand the causes which led to the Great Trek of the Boers, says Alleyne Ireland in the Atlantic. They were the misguided zeal of the English missionaries, the abolition of slavery with the safeguarding of the natives' interests, and lastly, what Canon Knox Little describes as "England's fatuous policy of vacillation, betrayal, friction, irritation, postponing, changing, doing and undoing."

The troubles with the missionaries began even before the colony was ceded to England. In 1811 a certain Mr. Read, of the London Missionary Society, wrote a letter which was widely circulated in England, in which he asserted that over one hundred murders of natives by the Dutch had been brought to his notice in his district, and that the Governor of the Colony remained deaf to the cry for justice. An inquiry was ordered by the government, and every facility was given the natives of proving Mr. Read's charges. After throwing the whole district into confusion by summoning over a thousand witnesses, many of whom were under arms on the frontier in expectation of a Kosa raid, the Circuit Court found that the charges were grossly exaggerated.

The net result was the sending up for trial of five Dutchmen. George McCall Theal, in his History of South Africa, says in regard to this affair: "The Black Circuit, as it was called, produced a lasting impression amongst the Dutch. It was no use telling the people that the trials had shown the missionaries to have been the dupes of idle story tellers. The extraordinary efforts made to search for cases and to conduct the prosecutions appeared in their eyes as a fixed determination on the part of the English authorities to punish them if by any means a pretext could be found. As for the missionaries of the London Society, from that time they were held by the frontier colonists to be slanderers and public enemies." That the actions of the missionaries really influenced the Dutch in their determination to leave the colony is shown by a manifesto published by Pieter Retief, one of the most prominent trekkers, in which were set forth the reasons why British rule was no longer endurable. The fourth paragraph of the manifesto says: "We complain of the unjustifiable odium which has been cast upon us by interested and dishonest persons, under the name of religion, whose testimony is believed in England to the exclusion of all evidence in our favor; and we can foresee, as the result of this prejudice, nothing but the total ruin of the country."

An Incident of Fast Railway Travel.

The other day when two miles from Treaty, Ind., Conductor Brooks, of the northbound "Flyer," stepped to the rear platform of the last coach and pulled two ten-dollar bills from the depth of his vest pocket. The stiff breeze blowing carried them from his hands and back along the track.

He frantically grasped the bell cord and gave it a mighty pull, but Engineer John Critz, supposing that it was a signal to stop at Treaty to let off a passenger, responded with two blasts of his whistle, and did not slacken speed. Treaty was soon reached, and when the train halted Conductor Brooks hastened around to the engine and related the tale of his loss. The return trip was begun, with the conductor and brakeman on the rear of the train eagerly scanning the track in the hope of finding the currency. Finally the train was stopped and the crew got off and prosecuted the search all over the right of way, sympathetic passengers joining in the quest. The search was abandoned and the conductor told all hands to get on the train, when the brakeman came upon both bills lying within three feet of each other, and then the train sped on. —Cincinnati Enquirer.

LAWTON SHOT DEAD.

FAMOUS FIGHTER KILLED AT HEAD OF HIS TROOPS.

Falls While About to Assault Insurgents—Won His Rank by Gallantry—Hero of Civil, Indian and Spanish Wars—Sketch of a Noble Life.

A Manila dispatch Tuesday reported that Maj. Gen. Henry W. Lawton had been killed at San Mateo. He was standing in front of his troops, the dispatch stated, and was shot in the breast and instantly killed by a Filipino sharpshooter. Gen. Lawton, according to a dispatch from Manila Monday night, started out with the Eleventh Cavalry and two battalions of infantry during the evening to capture San Mateo, where three hundred insurgents had entrenched themselves. The press dispatch announcing Gen. Lawton's death, when received in Washington, was sent immediately to the White House, where the cabinet meeting was in progress. The news was received with expressions of profound sorrow and regret.

GEN. LAWTON.

At the War Department instructions had been received Monday from the President to prepare Gen. Lawton's commission as a brigadier general in the regular army, to fill one of the existing vacancies and the adjutant general's clerks were at work on the commission when the information of Gen. Lawton's death was conveyed to the department. Gen. Lawton was a native of Indiana and won his commission in the army by gallant service during the war between the States and in the Indian wars. It comes only to a great nation that has been rent with civil war, menaced by frontier strife with fierce Indians and burdened with the responsibilities of a contest like the Spanish war and the subsequent actions in the tropical Philippines, to produce such a typical fighter as Maj. Gen. Henry W. Lawton. Personally leading troops in battle, where it would appear that no soldier could escape the death-dealing bullet, Gen. Lawton went through an experience that would have covered his breast with medals had he fought beneath the flag of an empire. When death came to him it was as if a personal blow had been dealt to every loyal American who had read of the deeds of the brave man.

Gen. Lawton was one of the "born fighting machines" that the United States army acquired at the outbreak of the rebellion, from private life. Acts of heroism marked his honorable career in the volunteer army that saved the nation, and, bearing the brevet of colonel for distinguished services in action, and proud in the possession of a medal of honor for signal acts of bravery before Atlanta in 1864, Gen. Lawton elected to make war his profession.

He was made a lieutenant in the regular army, first serving with the Forty-first infantry, but subsequently joining the cavalry arm of the service. When President McKinley made him a major general May 4, 1898, he was a lieutenant colonel in the regular army. To millions the story of the "hero of El Caney" is much fresher and much more vivid than the work of the intrepid Indian fighter who clung doggedly to the trail of that wily chieftain of the murderous Apaches, Geronimo, until he had successfully carried out his plan for the Indian's capture.

QUEEN VICTORIA'S CHRISTMAS PRESENT TO TOMMY ATKINS.

Each of these boxes contains half a pound of fine chocolate. The Queen herself chose the design for the cover, which is enameled in red, with the embossed medallion in gold. As soon as the 90,000 boxes were made, the dies were broken, so that no one but Tommy Atkins at the front may have one of the boxes. The present cost the Queen about $15,000.

"BLACK WEEK" IN LONDON.

Total British Losses Since War Began Are Now 7,630. "Black week" as last week is now universally called in London, has evidently aroused the British Government and the war office to a full sense of their responsibility and of the magnitude of the task before them. The papers unanimously applaud this awakening, despite the fact that they recognize that the heroic measures now decided upon savor rather of weakness than of strength. It was high time that something very energetic was done. The British losses in killed, wounded, prisoners and missing throughout the campaign now reach the enormous total of 7,630. As a result of the British reverses the whole South African country northwest is in rebellion. The natives there, as well as those in Basutoland, are said to be much disturbed and losing heart respecting the strength of the British. A dispatch from Rome says that all the news of the British reverses have been telegraphed to Abyssinia as far as the wires go, and then rushed by couriers to Menelek. It is believed Menelek is contemplating war against Britain and is only awaiting the opportunity when the British are weaker.

The Roberts case has worked one wonderful reform. It has made a great number of Congressmen exceedingly careful as to the company they keep. Such things ought not to be, but it is true that about the Capitol there may be seen every day a good many women of unknown associations and intentions. Their great anxiety is to become acquainted with members of Congress, and in order to achieve this purpose they send their cards from the ladies' reception room to the particular members upon whom they have designs more or less innocent. Heretofore members have amused themselves by responding freely to these calls, and have at times provided their callers with cards to the galleries, even going so far now and then as to sit down beside them. Now all is changed. Statesmen are very careful as to how they trot out to the reception room, and are surprisingly punctilious as to the identity of persons they sit beside in the public galleries. So the Roberts case has worked some good, after all.

The country may breathe with a certain degree of freedom now that it knows exactly where Mrs. Dewey and Mrs. Miles stand in the social world. Mrs. Miles ranks Mrs. Dewey where the army and navy participate as a corps, but in every other respect Mrs. Dewey takes the precedence of Mrs. Miles. Hence at all army and navy functions a convenient headache will save Mrs. Dewey the humiliation of trailing along behind Mrs. Miles, but poor Mrs. Miles will be compelled to plead chronic illness in order to escape Mrs. Dewey's assumption of superiority in a season's run. These important details should be carefully committed to the intelligence of every hostess and every menial, for should a waiter carelessly pass the batter cakes to Mrs. Miles before Mrs. Dewey and her necessities are served the entire social system would be plunged into hopeless disorder. We cannot be too careful of our etiquette in Washington public life.

The people of Washington are pleased that the Republican convention is to be held in the East. They believe that a great majority of the delegates and visitors to the convention will visit Washington either in going or returning from it. The last national convention Philadelphia had was in 1872, when President Grant was renominated. In 1876 the Republicans went to Cincinnati and the Democrats to St. Louis. In 1880 the Republicans met at Chicago and the Democrats at Cincinnati. In 1884 both parties held their conventions at Chicago. In 1888 the Republicans met at Chicago and the Democrats at St. Louis. In 1892 the Republicans met at Minneapolis and the Democrats at Chicago. Again in 1896 the Republicans went to St. Louis for the first time and the Democrats to Chicago. Now the Republicans are going to the city where they held their first national nominating convention.

The government has decided to increase the number of depository banks and the amount of deposits in such banks, with the hope of relieving the embarrassed monetary situation in New York. To this end the entire receipts of the government from internal revenue taxation for the next thirty days will be allowed to go to the depository institutions instead of into the treasury. The amount to be derived by the money market from this step will be from $30,000,000 to $40,000,000. Thirty days will pass, of course, before the full extent of the relief can be realized.

Speaker Henderson does not use the rosewood gavel that was presented to him by his friends in Iowa. The confusion in the House makes it necessary for the Speaker to use a more substantial weapon. Speaker Reed used a large ivory hammer with a strong handle and pounded so hard that the top of the desk was reduced to shivers about every three months and had to be replaced by an oaken plank at least twice and sometimes three times during the session.

Congress will probably revive the grade of vice-admiral and authorize the appointment of Winfield Scott Schley and Admiral Sampson to fill two positions of this rank. President McKinley has suggested that this would mollify the admirers of Schley and appease the friends of Sampson.

We wish you one and all a happy New Year. May prosperity attend you during 1900.

Mr. and Mrs. Phillip Working spent Christmas with Mr. James Riley, who lives near Indianapolis. Mr. Riley is a fancy hog raiser, and Mr. Working purchased two fine English Berkshire, male and female, which arrived in Culver today (Friday.)

Edwin Bradley, who has been making trial trips as fireman upon the Panhandle R. R., has returned to his home in this city. He expects a call for a permanent position at any time, as his work was perfectly satisfactory with the company.

That Turkey.

That Christmas turkey was delicious. It put us in mind of the good old days when the editor and family were residents of Hobart, Indiana, when a Christmas never passed but what a fat turkey was left at the editor's home, reminding him for that day at least "Peace on earth and good will to men" should be the predominant feature. In this instance the editor advertised for a fat turkey, hoping that some of his delinquent subscribers would come to the front with the bird, and at least settle a back subscription while at the same time he would make the hungry editor and family happy. But as time rolled on, and no one appeared with that much desired fowl, it began to look gloomy, and the editor's prospects for dining on turkey and cranberry sauce was "a desolation and a snare." Saturday the pencil pusher went to Plymouth, little dreaming of the surprise upon his arrival home—but when he finally did return to his own fireside, he was led into the kitchen, and lo, gently reclining in a pan, was a monster turkey, all dressed and ready for the oven, the compliments of Mr. Wm. Neobel. And right here we wish to extend to that gentleman our sincere thanks, and hope his shadow will never grow less. It was a fine bird and was greatly appreciated by those who picked his bones. Thus, for a short time the shadow was lifted from the heart of the poor country editor, who for one day in the year at least feasted to his heart's content, and tomorrow take care of tomorrow, hoping that his delinquents, who read the HERALD week after week and year after year, will open their hearts and pay up.

The War's Delays

is the way the old saying reads now.

It used to be "the law's delays," but the war people have shown that when it comes to delaying, the law is "not in it" with them.

Delays are dangerous, and one of the most dangerous to you personally is delaying to clothe your feet in a pair of SELZ SHOES, which are acknowledged to be the best shoes in the world for the price, and that price is always the lowest.

DELAYS ARE DANGEROUS, AND ONE OF THE MOST DANGEROUS TO YOU PERSONALLY IS DELAYING TO CLOTHE YOUR FEET IN A PAIR OF SELZ SHOES, WHICH ARE ACKNOWLEDGED TO BE THE BEST SHOES IN THE WORLD FOR THE PRICE, AND THAT PRICE IS ALWAYS THE LOWEST.

Narrow Escape.

On Christmas day, Frank McLane and E. H. Mow had a narrow escape from death. In the afternoon they hitched up a team and after getting into the buggy, Mow took the reins and started the horses out of the barn at a rapid gait, and making a sudden turn upset the buggy. McLane was pitched about ten feet in the air, and struck upon his head upon the hard frozen ground, cutting a gash about two inches long, and also bruising other parts of the head. Mow was thrown under the buggy and a bone in one of his shoulders was fractured. The horses were instantly brought under control by parties catching them. Had the team run away, Mow's career upon this mundane sphere would have ended then and there, as he was so tangled up with the buggy that escape from death would have been a miracle. Dr. Rea dressed the injured men's wounds and they are doing well.

Two Pointed Questions Answered.

What is the use of making a better article than your competitor, if you can not get a better price for it?

Ans.—As there is no difference in the price the public will buy only the better, so that while our profits may be smaller on a single sale they will be much greater in the aggregate.

How can you get the public to know your make is the best?

If both articles are brought prominently before the public both are certain to be tried and the public will very quickly pass judgment on them and use only the better one.

This explains the large sale on Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The people have been using it for years and have found that it can always be depended upon. They occasionally take up with some fashionable novelty put forth with exaggerated claims, but are certain to return to the one remedy that they know to be reliable, and for coughs, colds and croup there is nothing equal to Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. For sale by T. E. Slattery, Druggist.

Pains in the chest when a person has a cold indicate a tendency toward pneumonia. A piece of flannel dampened with Chamberlain's Pain-Balm is laid on to the chest over the seat of pain will promptly relieve the pain and prevent the threatened attack of pneumonia. This same treatment will cure a lame back in a few hours. Sold by T. E. Slattery, Druggist.
