Last Tuesday evening, dark clouds covered the face of the heavens, and it was predicted that we would have a large supply of the "beautiful" ere the dawning of another day. About nine o'clock little flakes of snow began to fall and at 10 o'clock it came down with a vengeance. When the Culverites awoke from their slumbers Wednesday morning, they gazed upon a large acreage of snow as far as the eye could reach, and it was soon discovered that the ground was covered to the depth of about eight inches. The snow continued to fall all day Wednesday, and as there was scarcely any wind, it settled with great care upon mother earth evenly distributed.

HEAVY BRITISH LOSS.

ROBERTS REPORTS FIFTY OFFICERS KILLED OR WOUNDED.

Invasion of the Orange Free State Is Sharply Contested, and Burghers Are Still in Fighting Trim—Boer Siege of Ladysmith Not Abandoned.

The idea prevalent in London that the Boers were demoralized and in a condition of panic was dispelled by the publication of a serious casualty list from Gen. Lord Roberts, without any explanation of how or where the losses were incurred. Gen. Roberts' previous dispatch, so far as it was published by the war office, gave the impression that the Boers were in full retreat, making hardly any resistance, and aroused the expectation that the next tidings would announce the surrender of Commandant Cronje's army. Then came the news that nearly fifty British officers, including two prominent generals, had been killed or wounded, while the losses of the rank and file were not mentioned. There can be no doubt that the British invasion of the Orange Free State is being sharply contested, and that the Federal forces are still in vigorous fighting trim.

The news from Gen. Buller's campaign is favorable as far as it goes, but the persistent report that Ladysmith had been relieved proves to have been premature. The Tugela river was crossed for the fourth time by the British Wednesday, but it would be almost absurd to assume that the retirement of the Boers from this point before the British advance indicates an intention to abandon the siege of Ladysmith and the possession of territory in Natal. In other words, the crisis is not yet passed, according to the information at present received, and all depends, not on Gen. Buller's campaign, which is now a side issue, but on Gen. Roberts' great dash at the Free State capital.

One of the costliest actions of the war occurred at Paardeberg drift Sunday, Feb. 18. Gen. Kelly-Kenny, in his pursuit of Gen. Cronje, caught the latter's rear guard at Klip drift and followed the burghers to the Boers' laager at Koodoosrand. The drift action began at day-break, the mounted infantry driving the Boer rear guard up the river toward the main body, while another body of mounted infantry maneuvered on the right, front and flank of the Boers. The British main body advanced to outflank the Boers' laager on the north bank of the river. Gen. Kelly-Kenny, having seized two drifts, found the Boers strongly intrenched and ordered an attack, with the Highland brigade on the left and Gen. Knox's brigade on the center and right, while Gen. Smith-Dorrien's brigade crossed the river and advanced along the north bank.

On both the north and south banks the ground is level and the advance across this was deadly and the British losses were heavy. The British guns shelled the laager vigorously and the Boers confessed to a loss of over 800 men. The terrific shelling was resumed Monday, when Gen. Cronje asked for an armistice. The shelling was continued Tuesday.

A London correspondent says that the withdrawal of the Boers before the British advance in both the western and eastern campaigns has been so general and precipitate that it seems to be no longer possible to account for it by the supposition that the movements constitute a new and well-planned maneuver. Gen. Lord Roberts, by rapid marches, has advanced unopposed more than a third of the way to Bloemfontein. Gen. Methuen has occupied Kimberley and restored railway communication between that place and Cape Town. Gen. French is still pursuing the enemy to the northeast. It is persistently reported that Gen. Kitchener has Commandant Cronje's army surrounded.

It is reported that Col. Plummer, who is moving to the relief of Mafeking, surprised the Boers in a night attack at Crocodile Pools. The Boers were intrenched on a steep, thorny ridge. While struggling through the barbed-wire entanglements the British alarmed Boer dogs. The barking of the dogs brought the Boers out, and they began firing. The British then made a bayonet charge, when the Boers exploded dynamite mines, and the British were forced to retreat.

BRITISH WAR OFFICE IN LONDON.

This picture illustrates the famous British war office in London, which, since Oct. 12, has been the European center of interest in the great South African trouble. It was here Gen. Roberts met the secretary for war, Lord Lansdowne, when it was determined to send "Bobs" to the command of the British forces at the Cape. Here are received all the official telegrams from the front and here are posted the bulletins which the authorities see fit to publish. Ever since the war began the street before the grim old building has been crowded with anxious relatives of the fighting men, eager for news of husband, brother, sweetheart or father, and many have been the distressing scenes the war officials have been compelled to witness. The building, as may be judged by its palace-like aspect, has accommodations for luxuriously lodging several persons.

ALLIANCE IS DENIED.

Secretary Hay's Answer to Macrum Is Given to the House.

The President sent to the House of Representatives Wednesday the answer of the Secretary of State to the resolution presented by Representative Wheeler of Kentucky calling for information as to whether Charles E. Macrum had informed the State Department that his official mail had been opened by the British consul at Durban, and, if so, what steps, if any, had been taken in relation thereto, and what truth there was in Macrum's charge that a secret alliance existed between the United States and Great Britain. The answer, at the President's suggestion, was made more comprehensive by the insertion of the reference to the fact that all of Mr. Macrum's official mail had been received at the State Department unopened, and that Mr. Macrum had not, after he left South Africa, communicated to the department any complaint about the opening of his mail.

The State Department said that inquiries set on foot immediately after the publication of Macrum's first statement developed the fact that the British Government had no knowledge of any interference with the correspondence of the United States consulate at Pretoria, and the additional fact that if any such interference had taken place it was contrary to instructions. The answer of the State Department states positively that no secret alliance or understanding exists between the United States and Great Britain. It is signed by Secretary Hay.

TAYLOR AND BECKHAM AGREE.

Kentucky Courts to Decide the Governorship Question.

The courts are to determine who is Governor of Kentucky and who is to perform the duties of Lieutenant Governor. Attorneys for Gov. Taylor and Lieut. Gov. Marshall and Mr. Beckham, after a conference of several hours Wednesday afternoon, reached an agreement as to how the trouble is to be ended.

Mr. Beckham is to withdraw his injunction suit filed before Judge Cantrill. He can if he desires file a similar one in Louisville. The injunction suits of Taylor and Marshall filed in Louisville are to stand. All of the suits are to be placed upon the ordinary docket. They are to be consolidated. Both sides are to use their best efforts to have them decided as quickly as possible.

During the pendency of the suits Messrs. Marshall and Taylor retain their respective offices, giving superseas bonds. An appeal to the Court of Appeals will not be opposed by either side. That court will be asked for a writ of error to the Supreme Court, neither side offering objection.

DR. L. E. KEELEY DEAD.

Originator of the Famous "Gold Cure" Passes Away.

Dr. Leslie E. Keeley, who made a million dollars out of his "gold cure" for the liquor habit, died at Los Angeles, Cal., of heart disease, Wednesday morning. He had a severe cold and while going to the bath room had an attack of heart failure. He soon recovered and made light of his illness, but before a physician could be summoned, expired. Dr. Keeley left no children. His estate will go to his widow and his sister, who live at Dwight, Ill.

Leslie E. Keeley, M. D., LL. D., was born in a small village in the interior of New York State, sixty-five years ago, and early in life removed to Michigan. He graduated in medicine at the Rush Medical College, and on the breaking out of the civil war enlisted in the medical corps of an Illinois regiment, serving his full time with distinction. At the close of the war he settled at Dwight, Ill., where he first evolved the theory that inebriety was a disease. He then began seeking a remedy, and after several failures he discovered that double chloride of gold and sodium, combined with other ingredients, had merits which led him to begin extensive demonstrations of his specific in the early '80s and to establish his first institute in 1887.

Side Lights on the Boer War.

Among the many appliances now being tried in warfare for the first time the tele-photographic camera is not the least important. Telephotography is often thought to be the taking of photographs by means of an apparatus combining a telescope with an ordinary camera. This is not strictly the case, although the principle is the same. Telephotographic action is brought about by specially devised lenses, the invention of an Englishman. Its advantages in military work and especially for balloon purposes is great. It has been used to advantage by the British in South Africa, although the war office has not officially adopted the device. In Italy, Spain, Russia and Germany the apparatus has been thus adopted. Telephotography was first used in the Sino-Japanese war.

Mafeking is the third of the South African towns in which there is a British garrison besieged. Ladysmith and Kimberley are the other two. Mafeking lies in the open, bare veldt which is as flat as a pancake. A few isolated kopjes, an ant heap here and there, a clump of bushes under three feet in height—these are the only things that break the monotony of the landscape. The town is practically defenseless. Mafeking is 870 miles from the Cape and 144 miles north of Kimberley. It is a simple little township of a few hundred souls and its only importance lies in the fact that it is a trading station with the far north.

Some one has lately been calling attention to the number of unmarried generals now serving in the British army. Lord Kitchener is one of the long list now serving in South Africa. Gen. Gatacre, Sir Archibald Hunter and Gen. Macdonald are also bachelors. Gen. Kitchener, it may be said, has been so busy with his duties as a soldier all his life, that, as he expresses it, "he has had no time to get married."

The World's Most Costly Church.

There are magnificent churches in this country, but nothing to compare with the Church of Our Savior in Moscow, which cost more than any other church in the world. It was built to celebrate the deliverance of Moscow from the French, and $4,000,000 was spent on it.

For Wireless Steering.

An invention for steering any craft, by means of an ether wave on the wireless telegraph principle has been perfected. In naval war it is expected to make the torpedo boat almost infallible. In this respect it will equal the famous Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which never fails to cure constipation, indigestion, dyspepsia, biliousness and malaria.

Illiteracy in Russia.

The illiteracy of Russia exceeds that of any other country claiming to have a civilized government. The Humanitarian states that in 10,000 villages of the vast empire there is not a school, and it is estimated that not 20 per cent. of the population of the empire has acquired even the rudiments of a common school education. It has been figured out that if the Czar would disband 100,000 men of the vast army he would thereby save money enough to provide a school for these villages. It is not surprising that the Czar should desire to reach some arrangement with the other nations which would permit him to partially disarm.

"New Brooms Sweep Clean."

The human body has been compared to a temple and the poet urges us to keep it entire and clean. To accomplish this end, every nook and cranny must be swept and garnished. The agent of the body that goes everywhere is the blood. If it is not strong, pure and life-giving, it is like a worn-out broom. It fails to do the work. Hood's Sarsaparilla makes a new broom of your blood.

WHY SHE RESIGNED.

The Member of a Woman's Club Co-founded the Two Popes.

"For the last year or so my wife has been ambitious to shine as a literary light," said Smith, with a chuckle. "I don't know how many clubs she joined, but if there were any that she did not belong to it was because she had never heard of them."

"The other night while I was reading my paper she interrupted me with a request for light about something that I did not catch except the word pope."

"Well," said I, looking over my paper.

"I want to know about him," she continued. "I must read a paper concerning him at our next literary meeting, and I do not know a single thing about him. Who is he?"

"Do you mean to say," said I, "that you know nothing about the head of the Roman church?"

"Oh, of course," she answered. "How stupid of me! I can read all about him in the encyclopedia."

"I resumed my reading and thought that ended it, but it didn't. The other night when I returned home I found my wife in tears, and before I had time to inquire what the matter was I was called to account in 17 different kinds of keys."

"Well, when the storm was over I learned the truth. It was the pope and not the pope of Rome that she was expected to read upon, and when she rose and read a paper on the pope it started a row that did not end with adjournment."

"But, seeing that she has resigned from all the clubs and that the children once more have a chance to get acquainted with their mother, I do not look upon it as a calamity."—Detroit Free Press.

Her Objection.

A New Hampshire man wished to have telephone connection between his house and a new one built for his son's summer residence. The best route took the wire over the cottage of an old lady, to whom he applied for permission to make the slight use of her roof that was necessary.

The old lady gave her consent, but made a firm stipulation at the same time.

"I'm willing you should run wires over my roof and hitch 'em wherever you see fit," she said pleasantly, "provided you don't use 'em after 9 o'clock at night. That's my bedtime, and I'm a light sleeper at best, and the noise of folks talking overhead would be sure to keep me awake."—Youth's Companion.

HIS VISIT TO VESUVIUS.

And What He Thought as He Gazed Into the Fiery Pit.

An American who detests sightseeing upon principle loafed for six weeks at Sorrento without stirring in the direction of places most travelers would have thought it criminal to omit. His only dread was the cross questioning of kind friends when he got home. To confess that he had deliberately staid away from all those celebrated spots of interest would bring down no end of scorn and denunciation upon him. But sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof, and the American resolved to trust to inspiration to get him out of such possible scrapes. The first person he met after leaving Sorrento was an American woman on the train, and the first thing she wanted to know was if he had climbed Vesuvius.

"I did," said the American without a quiver.

"Oh, tell me all about it!" cried the woman. "How interesting it must have been! My husband never would let me go up, but I'd just love to hear your experience."

The American, having heard the whole story many, many times, plunged into it with much detail. He described the long drive from Naples to the foot of the mountain and the steepness of the inclined railway and the way the women of the party splashed and all the rest of it. From time to time the woman interrupted with some searching question, but so well did he know his lines that never once did she catch him napping. At last, after a realistic account of how, after leaving the train he had plunged his way on foot through the hot, powdery lava to the crater's very edge, the American paused for breath.

"And what," asked the woman, "when your feet were as you gave down into that fiery pit?"

"Well," said I, looking over my paper.

SACRED THORN TREE.

Strange Story of One That Blossoms Only at Christmas.

Six miles northwest of the quiet little episcopal city of Wells rises a lofty peak, called by the Celtic natives of west Britain a "tor." It is conspicuous for miles around, with the tower of an ancient chapel on its top and with a neat little country town and the ruins of a noble abbey.

Sufficient evidence remains to show that the abbey was of vast proportions, occupying in all 60 acres of ground. It was founded by Saxon kings and farther endowed by the Normans and Plantagenets. The grand chancel and its fine chapels were built in the finest style of later Norman architecture, but now little more than crumbling walls and pillars testify to the once great beauty of the abbey.

The porch of St. Joseph's chapel, however, is in a fair state of preservation. Outside there grows the famous Glastonbury thorn that blossoms but for one day in the year, and that Christmas day. This tree has a strange history.

During his long journey from Palestine St. Joseph of Arimathea visited the district, he and his 12 companions having been sent by St. Philip, the apostle, to convert the then heathen nation of Britain and to cast out the Druid superstition.

St. Joseph and his followers found their way to Glastonbury, then known as "Yhiswytyn." They were all a-weary, and, arriving on the summit of the hill, Joseph, who was using a hawthorn stick as a walking staff, struck it into the ground, and it burst into bloom. The present Glastonbury thorn is an offshoot by continued grafting of St. Joseph of Arimathea's walking staff.—London Mail.

A Siberian Superstition.

A strange superstition, which may owe something of its origin to the associations bound up with the Biblical narrative of the Nativity, obtains credence to this day among the peasants of Siberia. By them it is believed that a gift of human speech and superhuman prophecy descends upon the beasts of the stall and vire during the mystic hour that heralds the Christmas dawn and that if one is old enough to hide beneath the straw in such occasions he will hear his fate for the coming year foretold by his domestic animals. A betrayal of his presence, however, entails certain destruction.—Fall Mail Gazette.

LOOKING INTO A SHOTGUN.

Bandit's Victim Tells How It Feels to Be Held Up.

"I happen to know how it feels to be held up," said a gentleman who now occupies a position of prominence in local railroad circles. "I acquired my experience as a passenger in a stage-coach about six miles from Tombstone, A. T., in 1884. We had a big load, six men inside, two on the driver's seat and an express messenger on the boot. Every man in the crowd had a revolver, two of the inside passengers had Winchesters across their knees, and the messenger had an 8 bore duck gun that contained nearly a quart of slugs. We were held up at about 4 in the afternoon by a single masked man, who rose suddenly from behind a pile of rocks and covered us with a 'sawed off' shotgun. All the curtains were raised, so there was a fair view of the interior, and when he yelled 'Hands up!' everybody obeyed.

"Then he told us to get out one by one and stand in a row, with our backs to him. I never hated to do anything so badly in my life, but I saw the others going and followed suit. About that time a half grown boy, apparently unarmed, appeared from behind the rocks and took up the collection, which included our joint arsenal. After that we were ordered back, and the chief bandit told the driver to go ahead.

"As far as I know, the robbers were never caught, but what especially impressed me about the episode was the reluctance of any of our party to take the initiative. I was certain the slightest resistance would be successful, but I realized also that the man who made the first move had an excellent chance of being killed, and I suppose all the others felt the same way. Anyhow, it happened exactly as I have narrated it. During the year I lived in Arizona there were eight or nine hold ups on the same road, and in no instance was there any resistance whatever. That taught me that a crowd of average men, gazing into a cocked shotgun, will do just about anything that is suggested."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

"Put your tongue out," said the doctor to 4-year-old Gilbert.

Little Gilbert protruded the tip of his tongue.

"No, no; put it right out," said the doctor.

The little fellow shook his head weakly, and the tears gathered in his eyes.

"I can't, doctor," he ventured at last. "It's fastened on to me."

BORNE OFF BY OWLS.

SINGULAR ADVENTURE OF A MINNESOTA GIRL.

While Defending Her Chickens She Is Attacked by Enormous Owls and Transported Some Distance—Prominent W. C. T. U. Woman Murdered.

Attacked by owls and carried by the birds to an abandoned building a quarter of a mile away, from which she was rescued by her father, was the exciting experience of little Annie Johnson. Mr. Johnson, who lives three miles south of St. Vincent, Minn., is a poultry raiser. At dusk the other evening Annie, who is 6 years of age, heard a commotion in the hen yard. Rushing out, she found the place had been attacked by a large number of white owls of gigantic size. The girl went at once to the defense of the fowls. Instantly she was set upon by the birds, which made ferocious onslaughts upon her. In order to protect her face and eyes from the beaks and claws of the birds the child was forced to cover her head with her dress. Her father, hearing her screams, ran from the house just in time to see the owls dart upon the child, fasten their talons in her clothing and then raise her from the snow-covered ground and bear her away. Mr. Johnson followed them until they disappeared in the old building. Immediately a great noise arose within, and as the half-crazed father entered he saw the birds deposit the child on a platform half way up to the roof, where she was immediately surrounded by hundreds of the birds. As Mr. Johnson approached they flew away. The little girl was found to be uninjured, but her dress was torn almost to ribbons.

SHOOT HIMSELF IN THE HEAD.

Business Man of Menominee Driven to Suicide by Reverses.

Former State Senator Joseph Fleishheim, who failed for from $75,000 to $100,000 recently, committed suicide at Menominee, Mich., by shooting himself in the head. The coroner's jury returned a verdict of suicide during a fit of temporary insanity, caused by business reverses. Mr. Fleishheim was one of the best and most prominent business men of the city, having conducted a large insurance agency for the last twenty years. He was also largely interested in various mining, manufacturing, and other industrial enterprises, and his failure was due to unsuccessful investments. He was 52 years old.

Wilson Wakelin Slays His Wife and Commits Suicide.

Wilson Wakelin, a prominent farmer who resided three miles north of Brock, Neb., murdered his wife by cutting her throat with a razor. He then went to the graveyard where his first wife was buried, and, standing on her grave, cut two gashes in his throat, falling forward on his face. Death in both cases was instantaneous. Mrs. Wakelin was very popular, being at one time president of the W. C. T. U. of Nebraska.

Kills His Employer's Wife.

Dr. Franklin Caldwell of Chicago shot and killed Mrs. Ephraim P. Hayes, also of that city, in the Endicott Hotel, New York. He then took his own life. At the coroner's inquest facts were brought out tending to show that Dr. Caldwell, who was employed by Dr. Hayes, was infatuated with the latter's wife, and killed her because his affections were not returned.

KANSAS CITY WINS IT.

Democratic National Convention Is to Meet There July 4.

Kansas City won the Democratic national convention for 1900 over Milwaukee on the first ballot, 40 votes to 9. When the committee, which met in Washington, got down to business Kansas City presented the following offer: A certified check for $50,000, and a hall free of expenses; the payment of the officers of the convention, headquarters, and expenses of the national committee. Against this Milwaukee could only offer a certified check for $40,000, and a promise of a sale of $10,000 worth of tickets to the convention, and a guarantee list representing $100,000. On the vote Milwaukee received nine votes, those of Delaware, Florida, Maryland, Illinois, Michigan, Montana, New York, Vermont and Wisconsin, while Kansas City received the remaining forty votes, Thompson of Nebraska not voting because Bryan did not want to appear to favor either city. Norris did not vote for the District of Columbia because of the contest over his seat.

The question of a date for holding the convention was debated long and earnestly, and was marked by the most interesting episode of the meeting—the reappearance of Senator Gorman on the scene of national politics. Three dates were proposed—May 9, by Thompson of Nebraska; June 14, by Tillman of South Carolina, and July 4 by McGraw of West Virginia, the last named date being chosen. Kansas City was favored by Mr. Bryan as the convention city, and in making the selection that it did the national committee acted in accordance with the wishes of the Democratic standard bearer of 1896. In the matter of the date of the convention, however, the committee went contrary to the expressed wishes of Mr. Bryan, who had favored a date in advance of that set for the Republican convention.

The platform for 1900 was outlined by the members of the committee as anti-expansion, anti-trust, anti-treaty, anti-England, and free silver. While the silver plank of the Chicago platform was considered certain of adoption, it was not expected to play a leading part in the campaign, except in the silver States.

GENERAL McNULTA DEAD.

Veteran Passes Away Suddenly at a Hotel in Washington.

Gen. John McNulta of Chicago died at the Hamilton Hotel in Washington Thursday evening. Gen. McNulta went to Washington Tuesday to attend to business in connection with the Illinois National Bank, for which he was the receiver. He was in his usual health until Thursday afternoon. He went to lunch with Comptroller Dawes at noon, and then returned to the hotel to do some writing. Judge Weldon of the court of claims, who was Gen. McNulta's law partner when they both lived in Bloomington, called at the hotel about 5 o'clock and found the general indisposed. Dr. Sowers was called and diagnosed the disease as angina pectoris. Gen. McNulta died before 6 o'clock, within an hour after Judge Weldon found him ill. Had not the judge called the general would have died with no one near him. Comptroller Dawes telegraphed to Judge Grosseup and Alexander Revell, requesting them to notify the family in Chicago. The general's son, Donald, is a lieutenant in the Twenty-third infantry, now in the Philippines. He was also informed of the death of his father.

INDIANA INCIDENTS.

RECORD OF EVENTS OF THE PAST WEEK.

Young Soldier Takes Poison—Son Murderously Assaulted by His Father—Insane Over Christian Science—Hunter Accidentally Killed.

At Scottsburg the dead body of Floyd Merrill, a prominent young man, was found in his room in a hotel. He was married about two months ago. His young wife left him for a few hours to visit her parents. Returning she found the door of the room locked, and, becoming uneasy, the door was forced open and the husband was found lifeless on the bed. He had taken four grains of morphine, purchased from a druggist on false representation. No cause is known for the act. Deceased was a soldier in the war with Spain and was formerly from Rising Sun.

Nearly Murders His Son.

Thomas Morris, nurseryman at Clinton, committed a murderous assault on his 18-year-old son, and is now in jail pending the results of the boy's injuries. Morris ordered the boy to go home, and when he refused to obey struck him with a stone, causing a severe fracture of the skull. Young Morris was removed to Terre Haute hospital. Morris is an announced candidate for sheriff. His wife is in an insane asylum.

Tortured Himself with Fire.

Louis Kantz, a carpenter, became violently insane over Christian science at Elkhart. He drove his attendants from the house with a chair and then put his foot in a coal stove, almost burning the flesh to the bone. He also threw live coals around the room with his hands. After this he escaped from the house and ran six miles into the country, stopping only when thoroughly exhausted.

Dog Guards Master's Corpse.

Armed with a shotgun and accompanied by his dog, Richard Cain of Shelbyville went in search of game, that his family might have meat for supper, he being out of employment. The next morning his dead body was found with his dog beside it. He had slipped, discharging the gun and the charge blew his head off. The dog had remained by the body throughout a blinding snowstorm.

The House continued debate on Porto Rican tariff bill, the principal speech being by Mr. Tawney of Minnesota, who replied to Mr. Littlefield's speech of Friday.

On Monday, in the Senate, formal discussion of the right of former Senator Quay to a seat in the Senate was begun by Mr. Tuley. Consideration of the Hawaiian government bill resumed. An amendment was made striking out the property qualification of voters for members of the legislature, but little other progress was made. In the House the debate on Porto Rican tariff bill was continued.

"Athwart the silence of our dreams,
Their memories fall like fitful dreams
From some dim flickering star
That hangs afar.
And then the present's glare and fret,
Shut swiftly in between, but yet
Hid in its transient skies,
The tireless eyes
Of endless years look, nor forget."

THE RETURN OF THE DISINHERITED.

Miss Acton stood by the center table in the library with a match in her hand. The big room was as dark as a cave. She could see absolutely nothing, but what was it that she heard? Surely some one was moving softly over the heavy carpet.

"Who's there?" cried the girl.
The only answer was a sound of scurrying of feet. Some one was hurrying toward the door communicating with the conservatory. Instantly the knob clicked sharply, but the door did not open because it was locked, as Miss Acton well knew.

The girl had an impulse to scream and another to run away, but her strongest desire was for light. She feared darkness more than the mystery that it hid.

It required less time than the tick of a clock for her to turn on the gas in the drop light and strike the match that was ready in her hand. The gas was ignited with explosive suddenness. All that was in the room seemed to leap into being out of vanishing shadows.

With his back against the conservatory door and his outstretched hands upon the wall as if to steady him, stood a young man, tall, lean and pale. He wore a long black overcoat, but it was hung open and revealed the garb of a convict.

"Do not be alarmed," she said. "I know who you are, and I will not betray you. Sit down, and we will decide what is best to do."

"I read in a newspaper that you had escaped," she said, "but I did not suppose that you'd dare to come here. Yet I believe that your father expected you and went away to avoid the risk of meeting you."

The convict said nothing, but the intensity of his facial expression was a distinct contribution to the conversation.

"You don't understand," said the girl. "Probably you don't know who I am. Let me tell you the whole situation in a few words. You knew of your father's second marriage?"

"Certainly."
"He married my aunt, and I came here to live with them by your father's great kindness. We knew that he had a son, and that his name could not be mentioned in this house, but neither my aunt nor myself had the slightest knowledge of the cause of the estrangement between you and him. It was only by accident that I found out where you were."

"How did it happen?" he asked.
"Through your letter to him last spring—the one he returned unopened. I noticed the Sing Sing postmark on it when it came. Of course, I did not then know it was from you, but he wrote the return direction upon the envelope. He sat at this table, and afterward I saw upon the blotter a part of the address reversed, of course, but legible, 'The State Prison, and your middle name, 'Irving.'"

"Arthur Irving Vane. Well?"
"Then I knew that you were a convict, and it was easy to guess that your crime and disgrace had caused your father to renounce you. But let me tell you of a secret; he loves you yet. I know it; I am sure of it; and that is why I am going to help you to-night, though he would never forgive me if he knew it."

"And you read of my escape?"
"Yes; I read a few days ago that a convict named Irving had escaped with two others. I knew, of course, that you had dropped your last name for your family's sake when you were arrested."

"There was a moment's silence. Then the young man leaned forward with his face close to hers, and asked in a low, intense voice, 'What are you going to do for me?'"
"What do you need?" she asked.
"Food? A hiding place?"

He sprang to his feet so suddenly that the girl was frightened almost to the point of crying.
"Money, money!" he whispered.
"That's what I need. With money I can get out of this country and begin a new life on the other side of the world. If I go back to prison it will kill all the good that's in me. If I don't—if I get clean away—who knows what I can make of myself?"

"I believe there is much truth in what you say," she replied. "If I could have advised you before you broke out of prison I would have advised you to serve out your sentence and then begin life anew. But I know that if you are captured now you will have to serve years and years in addition to your original sentence. I cannot ask you to do that. It is very wrong of me, but I shall help you to escape. How much money do you need?"

"More than you can get, I'm afraid," said he gloomily. "I must make Australia somehow."

There was a safe built into the wall of the library. Miss Acton walked up to it, turned the knob of the combination lock and swung open the iron door. Within was a second door of thin metal which the girl opened by means of a key that she took from her pocket.

There were books of accounts on each side of the safe within, and between them three little drawers, with pigeonholes above and below. Miss Acton took a roll of money from the lowest of the drawers and handed it to the convict, who counted it rapidly.

"Four hundred," said he. "I can never do it with this."
"It is all that belongs to me," she said. "Of course, we cannot touch your father's money."

An inward struggle convulsed the young man's slender frame.
"Why not?" he said at last. "You said that he still loves me."
"It would not be honest," she replied. "It would be theft. Can't you make this do?"

"Australia is a long way off," said he. "I think my father ought to contribute something."

"No," said she, firmly. "I will not consent, and you should not ask me."
"I'm afraid it's all up with me," said the convict, sinking into a chair. Miss Acton reflected deeply.

"It is possible if I asked my aunt she might do something for us," she said, "but I can't get to her now, because there are people in the hall. They might look in here if I opened the door."
"There certainly are people out there," said he. "I've heard them talking for the last few minutes. But I could hide, you know."

"True," said Miss Acton, "and perhaps that is the best way. Get behind those curtains at the window."
The convict rose hastily. Miss Acton closed the inner door of the safe and put the key into her pocket. As she turned away she saw her companion standing with his face in his hands, while his form was shaken by convulsive sobs.

"It's nothing," he replied; "only—only you locked that door. You didn't trust me. Why should you? And yet if there was some one who did, some one in all this world who could see the little good there is in me—"

Miss Acton took the key of the inner safe door from her pocket and laid it upon the table.
"You see that I do trust you," she said.

"Thank you, thank you, a thousand times," he murmured, and so strong was his emotion that he positively staggered as he made his way toward his place of concealment.
Miss Acton passed out into the hall—which was now light—and was greatly surprised to see in the reception-room on the other side her aunt in conversation with a young gentleman. He arose as Miss Acton approached, and she was the better able to admire his exceptionally fine physique. His face matched his form, being remarkable for strength and beauty; and, moreover, it had for her an aspect of familiarity. He looked as much like the master of the house as was possible considering the difference of their ages.

"Mildred," said that young lady's aunt in a voice betraying considerable agitation, "this gentleman is Dr. Vane, my husband's son."
Mildred knew that Mr. Vane had but one son—and the other things that she knew or suspected in that moment will readily occur to the reader. Without a word to the visitor she darted back across the hall. The library door was locked. In another instant she was back again in the reception-room.
"Dr. Vane," she cried, "there is a thief in the library. I have given him all my money and the key to the safe. I thought he was you."
"Thought he was I!" exclaimed the young man, astounded.

"Yes; I thought you were in Sing Sing, and that you had escaped, and—" "Thought I was in Sing Sing!" he cried. "So I was. I am assistant to the prison physician, and I have escaped—for a couple of days. But this thief! We must catch him. He has locked the door? Then I'll break it down."
"No, no," exclaimed Mildred; run around to the window. He will escape that way. Auntie, call the servants!"

She flew to the outer door, dragging Vane after her. In a moment she was racing around the house. Mrs. Vane had run through the hall to collect a posse of male dependents.

Mildred, left alone, hastened to the library door and listened. Instantly the door was opened and the convict sprang out into the hall.
"I'm much obliged to you for sending the others away," he called out as he fled by her. "You're a pretty bright girl—I don't think."

Mildred sat down on the stairs and burst into tears of rage. She paid no attention when her aunt, with the servants in her wake, rushed to join in the pursuit. Not till she heard the voice of Vane, returning, did she raise her head.

"You will beg the young lady's pardon for all that you have done," was what Mildred heard.

Looking up she saw Vane holding the culprit by the collar.

"I recognize this fellow," the young physician continued. "His name is Irving. His home is only a few miles from here, and it is not strange that he should have selected this house for a robbery that should help him in his flight."

"He need not apologize to me," said Mildred. "I don't deserve it." * * *

When the elder Mr. Vane returned to his home on the following day he heard the story of his son's adventure. It lost nothing by Mildred's telling. The young man appeared as her rescuer from the clutches of a desperate brigand.

It transpired that the quarrel between father and son turned upon a question of marriage, Vane, Jr., objecting to uniting himself for life to the bride selected for him when both were children. As a matter of fact, the father's views had somewhat altered in the course of years, and he was ready to seize upon the adventure here narrated as a pretext for the beginning of a reconciliation which became complete a few months later, when the young physician, with Mildred's full authorization, suggested her as a substitute for the daughter-in-law that the elder Vane had originally chosen.

GOVERNMENT OPERATES RAILROAD.

Philippine Line Passes Into Our Possession—25 Miles of New Road.

Fred Steward, of Butler, Ind., is now in charge of a train on the Manila & Dagupan Railway. This railroad is owned by the United States Government and is the first one to pass under government control. The line was secured along with the Philippines, and the United States not only is the absolute owner, but is building branch lines in order to improve the usefulness of the road to the American soldiers, as well as opening one of the most fertile and thickly populated valleys of the islands. The main line of the road extending from Manila to Dagupan is 135 miles and traverses a country of vast agricultural resources, giving two coast outlets for the products of the interior.

The average elevation of the line is four feet above the general level of the country. It is ballasted with gravel and has a road bed affording strong resistance to the heaviest rainfall of that tropical country. The line has sixty bridges with upright steel tubes filled with concrete acting as supports, while the bridges are of iron and steel. The locomotives were built in England, and being of less than ten ton capacity, are a source of wonder to the American soldiers who are now operating the line. The coaches are divided into three compartments, each capable of holding eight persons, and cane chairs are provided for the passengers who travel first class, while other classes, and they are several, must put up with stiff wooden benches. The freight cars are nearly all known as "goods cars" and are very small and dumpy, such as are used in this country as gravel cars, although only about one-half in length. The "goods cars" are loaded by natives, who receive 50 cents, Mexican, per day, and they invariably suspend operations at 4 o'clock p. m., regardless of perishable freight or other demands of the patrons of the road for better service. The passenger trains are operated by a higher class of employes and better accommodations are given.

The forces of Aguinaldo have in many places torn up the road, destroyed the bridges by dynamite, and moved the rolling stock toward the northern terminus of the road. They wrought such havoc in the line that the United States government was forced to ship additional equipment for repairs, and upon the suggestion of the corps of engineers sufficient material was shipped in a transport from San Francisco late in 1899 for the construction of a branch line twenty-five miles in length. This part of the line is nearly completed and affords General Otis army a means of crossing the swamps leading to the east.

The line has never been able to supply the demands upon it, and has proven a profitable investment, regardless of the Spanish guaranty of 8 per cent on the capital invested. The line was to have passed to the Spanish government in ninety-nine years in payment of the right-of-way, and that part of the contract comes to Uncle Sam, together with a railroad that was so completely demoralized that we were compelled to practically rebuild it.

A Tree Benefited by Fire.

In the savannahs of South America there grows a tree called by the natives chaparro, which is not only not injured, but actually benefited by prairie fires. The thick bark resists the action of the flames, and the hard seeds are supplied with a kind of wings, owing to which they are scattered broadcast by the strong wind which accompanies a fire.

BOER ARMY YIELDS

General Cronje Surrenders Unconditionally.

FIERCE FIGHT ENDS.

Stubborn Ten Days' Battle Results in Victory for British Arms.

Hopelessly Cornered and Subjected to a Most Terrible Artillery Fire for Ten Long Days and Nights, the Boer Commander, with His Entire Force, Is Finally Forced to Capitulate to Lord Roberts.

The British war office announced early Tuesday that Gen. Cronje surrendered with his whole force unconditionally. Following is Lord Roberts' dispatch: "Gen. Cronje and all of his force capitulated unconditionally at daylight and is now a prisoner in my camp. The strength of his force will be communicated later. I hope that her Majesty's government will consider this event satisfactory, occurring as it does on the anniversary of Majuba."

Gen. Cronje, commandant of a Boer army estimated at from 8,000 to 10,000 men, retreated from Modder River toward Bloemfontein, the capital of the Orange Free State, when Gen. French, with British troops, effected the relief of Kimberley. Gens. Kelly-Kenny and Kitchener managed to head off the retreat. Gen. French came to their aid from Kimberley and Lord Roberts concentrated his whole British force about the cornered Boer army. Fighting was kept up almost incessantly for ten days, ending, according to the British war office, with Cronje's surrender.

Early on the morning of the third day of Gen. Cronje's grim resistance the British infantry engaged the enemy in the dry bed of the Modder River. The morning sun disclosed the Boers toiling like ants on entrenchments around their laagers. A few shells were fired to prevent them from continuing the work. Every opportunity was given the Boers to surrender, but when toward afternoon there was no sign of any such intentions, Lord Roberts determined to crush once and for all Gen. Cronje's resistance. On the south bank of the river at a range of about 2,000 yards three field batteries and two naval twelve-pounders were positioned. On the north bank and enfilading the whole river, one howitzer, three field batteries and three naval 4.7 guns were placed.

Then followed a most wonderful scene. Over 100 powerful guns concentrating their fire upon a spot about a mile square. The exploding lyddite shells raised great clouds of green smoke, completely filling the bed of the river. The shrapnel burst on the edge of each bank, except for a short space where the proximity of the British infantry made it dangerous. British shells searched every bush and every ravine of the river bed. The enfilading guns must have done terrible execution. The roar was deafening, yet with a spirit of desperate madness now and again the Boers would attempt to snipe the naval guns which were firing at a range of 1,000 yards. The long line of three batteries belched forth death, while on each side lay two battalions of infantry whose Maxims sounded petty beside the roaring big guns.

It is universally held that this Modder River battle is one of the most desperate of history. Cronje's position in itself was not of the best, but he was surrounded by flat ground, across which the British must move to rush the enemy's force. It was this unprotected stretch of country which caused Lord Roberts to hesitate. He knew that men would fall there by hundreds if an attempt were made to traverse it. Accordingly he planted guns on commanding points and from a distance he began to hurl lyddite and shrapnel into the Boers' laager. In face of this belching out of sulphurous death Cronje's force held on—an extraordinary exhibition of desperate pluck that compels expression of admiration on every hand. Yet it is declared that he is open to grave censure for uselessly and wantonly sacrificing the lives of his men.

Public feeling against Secretary Chamberlain is growing more bitter.

It is again reported that Gen. Joubert is seriously injured and may never command in the field again.

British military authorities are advertising in Ireland for wheelwrights and blacksmiths, to enlist for one year at 50 cents a day and everything found.

Many would-be volunteers at the Cape are debarred by restrictions imposed by insurance companies, which charge an extra 5 per cent on soldiers' policies.

Among eminent men to aid the British in South Africa is Dr. A. Conan Doyle, who is the latest noted acquisition to the service. He believes it is a crisis where every Englishman is expected to do his duty and says he cannot sit by while there is so much to do at the scene of the struggle. He is a non-combatant and will organize a surgical corps to maintain a field hospital with accommodations for 100 soldiers. Dr. Doyle's praiseworthy act is evoking much enthusiasm from the English press and people. His title to fame rests upon authorship and the writing of plays, but this act advances him more in the estimation of his countrymen than anything he has yet done to win their approval.

Mr. Hunter, who is 91 years old, still shaves himself with a steady hand and takes long walks daily. His wife, who is a year younger, is not yet willing to leave to her youngest daughter, 52 years old, the care of all the household arrangements. Mr. Hunter married Miss Sarah Reed in 1829, and in 1853 removed from Ohio to Iowa, where they have since lived. Twelve children were born to them. Six of the children are still living, the oldest being now 69 years of age.

William Alden Smith, the Michigan Congressman, admits that he once stole a ride on a train of the railroad of which he is now general attorney. He went to work as a page in the Michigan Legislature after that memorable ride. To-day he is but 40 years of age and is serving his third term in Congress. He was born of American parentage in Dowagiac, Mich., May 12, 1859. He has crowded into his busy life the experiences of the newsboy, the messenger boy, the page, the reporter, the lawyer, the politician, and that of the newspaper owner.

MRS. JOSEPHINE C. WOODBURY.

Mrs. Josephine C. Woodbury was adjudged guilty of contempt of court by Judge Bradley in the Superior Court at Boston, in connection with the case brought by her against Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy, head of the Christian Church, for alleged criminal libel. Mrs. Woodbury was fined $50 and paid it. The alleged contempt consisted in making public the substance of her declaration in the suit against Mrs. Eddy and in submitting to interviews on the suit.

James F. Carey, a member of the Massachusetts Legislature, has published a bill that would do much to eliminate lobbyists. It provides that all agents of corporations be forbidden the use of the rooms commonly used by members of the Legislature. No agent will be permitted to enter the premises of the State House who does not wear a badge furnished by the sergeant-at-arms and worn conspicuously, on which the words "Legislative Agent," or "Legislative Counsel," are printed in large letters.

When Johnson was President his wife was an invalid and at all social functions Mrs. Patterson presided, sometimes assisted by her sister, Mrs. Stover. Mrs. Patterson is 78 years old.

Nothing but greed has caused the flowing of the best English blood, and nothing but greed has characterized England in all of its wars; consequently the great mass of American citizens hope the Boers will win. A smooth individual with a hard luck story dropped into DeLong last Friday night and proceeded to the DeLong house, the only hostelry in said village, and negotiated with the landlady, Mrs. Mazer, for a night's lodging, the outcome of which was, that he was given the desired hospitality in exchange for which he handed over his overcoat. The family went to church that evening and left the stranger to keep the house. He certainly did a thorough job, for when the proprietress returned from the services the house was the scene of devastation. The contents of drawers and all receptacles had been dumped out upon the floor and after a hurried inventory it was found that the stranger had departed with about $22 and an amount of jewelry. Worst of all he had taken the pawned overcoat. The police were notified to be on the lookout for the man.

Suspended Animation.

The Daily press of St. Louis, Mo., worked up considerable sensation over the case of fainting from lack of food, of Mrs. Erenesta Heith, of East St. Louis, on Jan. 7th. City Undertaker Geo. H. Broggemeyer, was called to the home of the lady who lived with her husband and brother, both old men. He reached the bedside about 8 o'clock a. m., and after asking questions as to the death of the lady, he approached the bed and took hold of her arm. The lady instantly sat upright in bed, asking "who are you, are you a doctor." The lady was taken to the hospital, continued to improve. Heart trouble and lack of proper nourishment were the cause of the prolonged fainting spell. There was not the least danger of the lady being buried alive. The press have done much harm in instilling into the minds of the people, the fear of being buried alive. The thorough tests applied by undertakers of the present day, preclude all possibility of such mistakes being made.—Western Undertaker.

I have been afflicted with rheumatism for fourteen years and nothing seemed to give any relief. I was able to be around all the time, but constantly suffering. I had tried everything I could bear of and at last was told to try Chamberlain's Pain Balm, which I did, and was immediately relieved and in a short time cured. I am happy to say that it has not since returned.—JOHN EDGAR, Germantown, Cal. For sale by T. E. Slattery, Druggist.

Rev. E. Edwards, pastor of the English Baptist Church at Minersville, Pa., when suffering with rheumatism, was advised to try Chamberlain's Pain Balm. Should any sufferer profit by giving Pain Balm a trial it will please me." For sale by T. E. Slattery, Druggist.

The Democratic state committee met at the Grand hotel in Indianapolis, and fixed the place and date for holding the state convention this year.

All the members of the committee were present and the first matter taken up was the selection of a date for the convention. On motion of Dr. M. T. Shively, committeeman from the Eleventh district, June 6 was selected. After the selection of the date the committee considered propositions from Terre Haute, South Bend, Fort Wayne and Evansville, as the place for holding the convention. A committee from Terre Haute made a proposition to the committee in behalf of that city and the other cities were represented by their respective committeemen. A vote was taken and Indianapolis selected on the first ballot.

The basis of representation was fixed at one delegate for every 200 and a fraction over 100 votes cast for John B. Stoll, presidential elector-at-large in 1896.

The dailies state that there is great joy in England over the fact that the Britishers have captured Cronje and his whole army, and are also winning victories right along. The world at large has no economies to tender the British empire on account of its success, for with 20 men to one the result could hardly have been different. Yet, with these terrible odds, the Boers have taught great British that fighting savages, and a civilized people are vastly different. In this unequal war, the loss on the English side has been great and the end not yet; and if other nations would do what they should do, they would call a halt, and compel England to withdraw her army from South Africa, and leave the heroic Boers in peace.

THE NATIONAL DEBT.

The treasury will have to meet nearly one hundred million dollars of bonds which fall due in 1904. In 1905 there will be 550 millions more, and approximately 200 millions more in 1908. The price which these bonds have realized to investors indicate that a two per cent bond can be floated.

Communicated.

MR. EDITOR.—Several parties are canvassing Union township securing signatures to a petition prohibiting the granting of saloon license to any applicant for saloon license in the township. The writer of this communication was approached by a man procuring signatures and imperturbed to sign the same, said individual growing eloquent in portraying the great moral result of closing the saloons upon the community. As we make no pretention of being Awful Good, we asked him if certain church members had signed it and was answered in the negative. This has set us to thinking, and the result is, how can temperance people expect, when these who belong to church, and in the holy temples pray for the uplifting of humanity and make long prayers for God to wipe out sin from the face of the earth, refuses to sign said petitions how can it be expected that the rank and file of the world will sign said petition? And on the other hand how can said church members who are cognizant of the fact that 200,000 young and middle-aged men go down to drunkards graves every year, go directly to the polls every election, and vote for high license. How inconsistent! How can a true christian vote for the saloon and then pray God to remove the evil?

When Christ was on earth, he waged an incessant war upon all evil, and took no compromising position, financially or otherwise. The edict He left was that "Ye should abstain from all evil and keep his commandments," and one of his commandments were, "Put not the cup to thy neighbor's lips."
