Ice! (Some, at least...)

As evidenced by this photo taken at the east end of Culver Academies' campus and facing Aubbennaubee Bay early this week, Lake Maxinkuckee is beginning to freeze over (though not, it should be noted, sufficiently so as to walk on, unless you're one of the geese sitting and strolling on the ice near the town beach). Hawk Lake seems already to have frozen. This will be welcome news for ice fisherman and the Culver Chamber of Commerce, which is looking towards revisiting the canceled ice fishing tournament and winter carnival from last year, when the lake failed to freeze at all.

Davis recalls first day on the job at Culver – 77 years ago – and life on campus, in town, and on the farm

By Jeff Kenney
Citizen editor

Elisabeth Davis may hold a completely unique place in the history of Culver -- both the town and the Academies, where she'll likely head to work today just as she did on March 15, 1936, nearly 77 years ago. Even discounting the seven years she spent home, raising her young children, that still makes 70 years of employment at the same Culver institution. And she's still at it.

"Mrs. Davis" -- as she's been known on campus all these years -- was interviewed and hired by then-Lt. John W. Henderson (late Col. and Dean Henderson), father of Jim Henderson, an immeasurable force in supporting and promoting today's Culver Academies. At that time, Leigh Gignilliat -- the man who launched the Black Horse Troop, engineered its involvement in Presidential Inaugurals, and played a huge role in crafting the school as it is today -- was the superintendent. Through the years, Davis would work with Academies heads Colonel Gregory, Seddon Fleet, Colonel Elliott, General Spivey, General Dobson, Lieutenant General Carpenter, Dean Benson, Colonel Barone, Dean Mars, and Dean Manuel, and of Academies' Admissions Office this fall during the weekly course today's Head of Schools, John Buxton.

Her work, at the Admissions Office in East Barrack, remains a critical part of the "behind the scenes" functions of the school, where she maintains over a century's worth of documents and records; and that's not to mention the invaluable asset of her memory itself.

That memory contains, of course, not just the decades past of Culver Academies, but those of the broader Culver area, where her family's roots run deep.

Deep Culver roots

Her mother Nora Pearl, of the Voreis and Hatten families, was the oldest girl in a family of 10 from east Pennsylvania. Elisabeth's father Jesse Zechiel's family had come from Germany, though he was born in this area after the family settled west of town.

"When my father could do work, he couldn't go to school until they had their crops all in. His father (who died when he was 12) remarried and my father had to get out on his own. He went to work in the Burr Oak area; that's where he met my mother."

Davis' parents lived and farmed east of Lake Maxinkuckee. She was born, she says, close to the Poplar Grove Methodist Church, "around the corner on the house up the hill, south of the church."

Family members and friends know she earned the nickname "Auntie Babe" pretty early on, while her mother was in the hospital and her aunt cared for her as a baby, giving her the nickname, which has stuck ever since.

Many in Culver will recall Elisabeth Davis' brother Ferris, who was born near Burr Oak during the time her father worked for the Vonnegut family near what later became the Academy airport. Ferris passed away in 2010 at age 101. Their sister, Marguerite, died in 2009.

When Elisabeth was 3, her family moved next to the Burr Oak cemetery, where they farmed as they did their entire lives.

The family kept seven or eight cows, and Elisabeth's father would milk them early in the winter mornings before walking from Burr Oak to Culver to spend the day working in the Medbourn ice house on East Jefferson Street. Her uncle's brother-in-law furnished the horses which pulled the ice blocks out of the lake. When dark hit, she says, her father would trudge home and milk the family's cows again.

Henry Zechiel's farm and the Cloverleaf Dairy

Elisabeth recalls relative Henry Zechiel (who then resided where CVS Pharmacy is today, at Ohio and Jefferson Streets) wanting "a good guy to run his farm," so Grandpa Hatten suggested Elisabeth's father Jesse. There were over 300 acres to farm on Henry's land, west of town on State Road 17. Cows, of course, were milked by hand.

She remembers airplanes landing in the hayfield on that farm when she was a child, and portable steps being set up so Culver residents could step in and take plane rides.

Another vivid memory is hearing her brother and father talk about witnessing the getaway car drive by immediately following the 1933 robbery of the State Exchange Bank. The Zechiels watched as the robbers dumped their hostage, bank employee Carl Adams, from the vehicle, part of a dramatic incident in which a Culver posse tracked down the robbers, making national headlines in the process.

After that day, says Davis, a large sign was kept on the Zechiel family porch in case of another robbery

Culver Boys & Girls Club one of top attended in Indiana

Monnier discusses remarkable growth, impact, and community support of CBGC

By Jeff Kenney
Citizen editor

Culver area youngsters spent a combined total of some 58,000 hours at the Culver Boys & Girls Club as of mid-December, 2012, according to unit director Cory Monnier -- and that's just one figure among many which he told Culver Kiwanians adds up to some "exciting trends" at the club.

Addressing Culver's Kiwanis Club last month at the Culver Public Library, Monnier said he'd initially been hesitant to take the lead position at Culver's Boys & Girls Club, since he knew first-hand the challenges of raising funds for such a club even at his previous post in Valparaiso, a community of 30,000.

"But I overlooked how strong this community is," he admits. "We may disagree on things (in Culver), but when push comes to shove we come together in force. There's nowhere that's more evident than the Boys & Girls Club."

Before sharing new statistics on the CBGC, Monnier told the story of a local member he called Michael (not his real name). Rather than being at the club so his parents can work, Michael was sent by his grandparents so he can "experience childhood."

Michael's mother, explained Monnier, is a drug addict and his father's identity is unknown, so he lives with his grandparents. His grandfather is confined to bed or a wheelchair, and his grandmother is terminally ill with lung cancer; neither knows what will happen to Michael when they pass away. They're "crossing their fingers" his mother will be "clean" by then.

"His grandmother sends him to the Culver Boys & Girls Club so he can be a child and play with his friends," said Monnier. "We have stories like that all the time."

Though it started earlier as a youth club, Culver's Boys & Girls Club began in 2007; since then, he said, membership has grown from 150 to nearly 300, a staggering number given the entire school population at Culver Elementary is less than 500.

Average daily attendance, added Monnier, has nearly doubled recently. He shared a photo of one recent day at and getaway.

"They could tie the sign to the fence on each side and put it across the road (to stop escaping bandits)," she says.

She recalls her family paying to have electricity finally brought to the house, which facilitated purchase of a milking machine. Prior to that, they milked the 40 or so cows by hand. The milk was the life's blood of the Cloverleaf Dairy, which Henry Zechiel operated across the street and just west of his home. The dairy started at the northeast corner of Slate and Jefferson Streets, though it later moved directly south, to the site of today's Hammer's Garage.

"Henry came out and picked up the milk (from the farm) every morning," says Davis. "He prepared it for bottles for the dairy. We got half the check."

Milk, of course, was placed on residents' doorsteps in those days, and Cloverleaf was one of several active delivery and bottling business operating in Culver at the time, including the Lake View and Miller Dairies.

The house and farm buildings at the family's old home west of town are today but a memory, having burned years ago.

School days

Elisabeth attended school in Culver (by the time she was old enough, the little Burr Oak school near their home had shut down), graduating in the class of 1935. She doesn't remember many details about her early school years, but she does recall bus driver Sam Jones picking the students up in a sleigh during the snowy wintertime.

"One night the sleigh upset going into town (after school)," she recalls. "Robert Osborn was my classmate; he just cried. Nobody got hurt."

In spite of the Great Depression raging at the time, Davis' high school class of 44 took the standard class trip to Washington, DC. One classmate's father worked for the philanthropic Marmon family on the east side of the lake, and the family helped offset the cost of the trip, she says.

Davis also recalls her father driving the family to town each Saturday for groceries. In those days, O.T. Goss ran the hardware store in the same Main Street building it occupies today.

"The men and my father's brother would go to the hardware and Mr. Goss would let them visit in there while the women did their shopping."

She began piano lessons under Elizabeth Hubble starting in the third grade and through high school; she would become church pianist at Mount Hope United Methodist for much of her life.

Her parents' family had started out at Poplar Grove church, but with the move to Burr Oak, they joined the Burr Oak Church of God there (Elisabeth would make the move to Mount Hope after marrying Eldon Davis).

"I lived through the Depression and World War II," Davis notes. "The folks said we were poor, but I never felt we were poor. We always had enough to eat, but mother did sewing and took hand-me-downs."

During her senior year at Culver High School, Elisabeth Davis says she was fortunate to be one of the seven or eight students out of 25 chosen to take typing classes. She'd hoped to attend college, but the money wasn't there, so after graduation, she headed back to the high school to take shorthand classes.

Early days at CMA

A cousin working at Culver Military Academy suggested Elisabeth interview for a position in the Admissions office, which in those days was upstairs from its current home.

In those days, she says, Henderson occupied the two rooms from the stairway east, with a summer and winter school secretary in the end room. One woman was head of the office and another handled bookkeeping. Everything was done in pen and ink, she recalls, not typed. For a number of years, Elisabeth herself addressed Culver catalogs to those who inquired for them, some days as many as 500 catalogs per day.

Three years after she was hired, the Admissions office was moved across Sally Port to the north. Elisabeth worked her way up until she was a typist and secretary, answering phones and keeping the books.

"I could tell you how many were in the summer school and winter school," she says, and she also typed the student rosters.

"Dean Henderson gave me two days (to type the entire roster), so I learned to type accurate and fast!"

Over the decades, Elisabeth Davis amassed knowledge of the sorts of details unlikely to make it into the historical annals of the school. For example, faculty members were required for a number of earlier years to attend chapel. If they missed, they received a letter from the superintendent Monday morning seeking an explanation.

Davis found all those letters after the building's basement flooded in August, 1988. The water-damaged files were first sent to Logansport to be frozen; then to Georgia for drying. Dean Nagy asked her to sift through the resultant files and discard what was no longer relevant.

She recalls staff members once having to have a leave slip indicating destination and duration, should they wish to leave campus, with arrangements made for duties to be covered. Those permission slips, too, were kept after the flood, she says.

"Things were very firm," she told the Culver Alumni magazine in a 1998 article recalling her service, "with the faculty and the staff, and also with the students. But Dean Henderson always made it very clear, just like we do today, tout Culver stands for academics."

Davis also clips any mention of a faculty member in the media, and keeps collections relating to former faculty as well.

"Everything used to be in writing; now it's not that way, with the computers. They do things differently. "

Davis recalls Gen. Gignilliat "doing a lot of entertainment" of guests and dignitaries at the campus, including foreign visitors of note. She also recalls superintendent Col. Gregory serving three years with the Army during World War II, one of several faculty who served during that period. She fondly recalls the late Dean John Mars and his kindness to employees during his tenure at the helm of the school.

"Distant cousin" the late Verda Romig was also a household name at Culver Academy. She joined the Commandant's Office in 1932 and retired in 1972.

Marriage and children

Elisabeth Davis met her husband, the late Eldon Davis (he passed away in 2004), while the two were in school.

FILE PHOTO

Elisabeth Davis feeds calves on her family farm, photographed in a 1992 article in the Marshall County Life newspaper.

"He would come and sit with me at ballgames," she recalls.

The two were married at the Burr Oak Church of God in 1945, as the war wound down. Due to the war, however, she says acquiring electrical equipment was sometimes a challenge. A cottager on Lake Maxinkuckee who was acquainted with Elisabeth's mother and who worked in Chicago procured the couple a refrigerator at one of the large department stores in the Windy City.

"It was a display model; she hauled it down on the trailer with a table and chairs. It's still running today and we've never had a service call on it! It's setting in my kitchen now."

Immediately after marriage, the Davises moved to the Fulton County farm where she still lives. The couple farmed full time to help make ends meet, and Eldon was exempted from military service since he had to be on the farm.

Soon children Paul and Eldonna arrived, and Elisabeth took time away from her Academy post from 1954 to 1961.

When the children were little, Eldon's brother Don would help with the milking, recalls Elisabeth, so once a year the family could take the children as far as they could drive in a weekend ("The kids just wanted to make sure they had a swimming pool!" she says).

"That was our vacation," she says of the annual trip.

Over the years, Eldon Davis served as Aubbeenaubee Township trustee for two terms, as well as a number of years on the Culver Comm. school board.

Paul attended Ivy Tech to study computers, and Eldonna took secretarial courses in Elkhart, though Paul would later return to farming, where he assisted Eldon with the duties. In the mid-1990s, the decision had to be made to sell the dairy cows, due partly to Eldon's health and partly to the cost of staying in the business as requirements (and thus costs) increased in the dairy industry. The Davises had been milking some 50 cows.

Theirs is one of many dairy farms -- local and national -- to fade away in lieu of massive operations, for a variety of reasons. The Davises, however, maintain the farm itself, with Paul handling most of the duties.

"The good Lord's blessed us," says Elisabeth, "and now since Eldon's gone, it's a blessing to work. It's hard for me to adjust. I can't get out and drive and go; it's not safe."

Neighbor and co-worker Chris McNamara picks her up most days for work at the school.

"I will work as long as I can be of help," she says. "I just work from day to day and be thankful."

Academies changes

Davis recalls some of the many sea changes at Culver Academies through the years, including the arrival of female students on campus and the launch of the eventual Culver Girls Academy.

"When Mr. Barone was superintendent, the boys could not hold a girl's hand or put his hand around her," she recalls. "He was the only one that emphasized that."

The biggest change, however, has been the computer revolution, which has affected virtually every aspect of how work is handled at the school.

"This technology is beyond my little mind," she smiles.

Through the years she received a watch marking her 25 years of service, and in 1994 a clock. During Culver Academies' Reunion weekend in 1998, Davis received honorary Culver Legion membership and a Culver ring in recognition of her service. Then-Legion President Richard Foster (class of 1961) called her "absolutely irreplaceable."

"I've enjoyed my work," she responded at the time, "and didn't want to leave with a rocking chair."

She told the Alumni magazine later that year that doesn't deserve the ring. "But I sure am proud to have it. How wonderful."

"I didn't expect to work here that long," she added. "But it worked out, and the school's been very good to me."

Slick conditions cause accident at Academies property

Marshall County police were called to Culver on December 27 around 8:40 a.m., where county deputy Jonathan Bryant responded to a call at Culver Academies reporting an accident. Raul Sanchez, 44, of North Judson, slid into a gate and brick pillar while driving a 2005 Ford 500, due to slick road conditions. Minimal damage was done to the school's property. Sanchez's vehicle sustained front end damage.

Letter to the editor

Clarifying the paramedic question

To the editor:

Regarding the issue of town funding of paramedic training for Culver EMS personnel: I was elected as a member of Culver's town council to vote for what the people of Culver want, and I am against spending their tax money on something that won't benefit the people of Culver.

At the last town council meeting, I voted against paying the cost of paramedic classes for two members of Culver's EMS service. After reading the Culver Citizen article (Jan. 3, 2012 edition -- editor) covering that council meeting, I wanted to clarify the reason I voted against funding the classes.

I'm not against paying for higher education for our fire, EMS members, or any town employees, but Culver's EMS service does not operate on a paramedic level, so Culver EMS staff taking paramedic training will be training for another service, outside of Culver.

Not only is Culver not currently a paramedic service, but we have no guarantee it will become a paramedic service in the foreseeable future. I am in favor of funding EMS training which will benefit the people of Culver, in the present or immediate future.

If you go to Plymouth the way I usually do—and, admittedly, hardly anyone does—at least part of the trip is liable to involve travelling down what my parents would have called Behmer Road—County Road 14B—whether all the way from the intersection with SR 17 just north of Burr Oak or just from the T junction with the southern part of Olive Trail. Typically, unless I am making a point of checking up on the statue of Chief Menominee on Peach Road, I turn north off the Behmer Road to take the bridge across the Yellow River on Olive Trail, and so eventually to emerge back on 17 just west of the hospital. And in fact for the last several years the intersection of Olive Trail and CR 14B has been signposted in such a way as to give priority to the turn, rather than to traffic continuing along 14B.

The fact is, though, that you can go (or come from) farther east on the Behmer Road—there's about another mile of it before it has a T intersection with Nutmeg. And, of course, thanks to the grid system, you can get to that same intersection by heading east from Culver on SR 10 and turning north on Nutmeg, the first road east after the railroad tracks.

Whichever way you come to it, that little intersection is important because, just north of it, Nutmeg Road crosses, on a bridge so short that if you blink you will miss it, over Wolf Creek, a small tributary of the Yellow River, into which the creek runs about half a mile to the northwest. That crossing is more or less what's left of the village of Wolf Creek, a name that comes up frequently in the early history of the county and, at one significant point, of Culver.

Nutmeg Road runs along the eastern edge of Menominee's Reservation, and in fact if you visit the statue these days, you'll find an added little marker stone that comments that "Archeological evidence suggests that Chief Menominee's village was located approximately 2 1/2 miles southeast of here on the northern bank of the Yellow River near Wolf Creek." To be fair, I haven't seen the archeological evidence in question, but I am inclined to doubt the marker, simply because the pioneer sources indicate otherwise. On the one hand, Daniel McDonald says specifically that Menominee's village was at Twin Lakes, where also stood the chapel, and whence the Trail of Tears began in August of 1838. And, on the other, McDonald accounts for the settlement at Wolf Creek: "This territory was originally in possession of the Fox Indians and another friendly tribe. The Pottawattomies, when they found their way here, claimed the right of possession, and as a natural consequence a feud sprang up between them, resulting in many hard fought battles before the Pottawattomies got possession. The last of these battles, according to tradition, was fought on the site of this village. This open space in the wilderness was, prior to the settlement of that part of the county by the whites, occupied by a few families of the Pottawattomies. In 1836-40 this place was dotted over with small rises of ground, indicating the former cultivation of maize or Indian corn. It had been unoccupied, however, for some time prior to 1836" (20th Century History of Marshall County, p. 9).

By 1840, the creek had been dammed up and equipped with a grist mill and a sawmill. McDonald says that Robert Clark Bliven was the proprietor, and named the spot "Birmingham" (130). Mr. Bliven was, however, swept over the dam and drowned during a storm on February 28, 1850, and in 1851 the mill came into the hands of Solomon Zehner, whose sons William and David took it over after his death in 1852 (McDonald, 69, 172, 463; History of Indiana [1890], Vol. 2, 48). William bought out his brother and went on to build other mills, including one in Plymouth, and became the leading miller of the county. McDonald suggests that the original mill-pond became something of a nuisance, being a breeder of ma-

Juicing

One of the most pleasurable, satisfying and healthiest to eat foods is freshly squeezed juice, or a fruit smoothie. As a matter of fact, I make one almost every morning after a workout. Fresh raw fruits preserve enzymes and vitamins in their original forms, allowing us to receive the maximum amounts of nutrients that we need on a daily basis. Raw fruits and vegetables take about 15 minutes to digest, whereas cooked food can take up to 5 hours. If the food is juiced, the nutrients are available within minutes! If you are an athlete desiring to achieve better performances, or if you simply aspire to feel better and have more energy throughout the day, fresh fruit and vegetable juice can be an important addition to your life.

Do you want to improve your social life? Many people today enjoy foods and environments that cater to healthier living. Menus in restaurants reflect nutritious cuisine that is carefully and deliberately prepared for healthy societal interaction. I enjoy hosting parties for neighbors and friends when one of the featured foods is fruit smoothies. On the other hand, my kids appreciate the fact that I love them enough to concoct one for them too, however they do not appear to be as thankful as I think they should be. Perhaps one day when they are a bit older.....

What kind of juicer is best? It all depends on budget and desired style. I use a Vita-mix machine because it blends the entire fruit, seeds and all. Plus, it is very easy to load and clean. First of all, use as much of the fruit as possible. I mix up to four fruits, plus a carrot with each batch. And, I add store purchased 100% juice to thin it down. Juicing can be a great addition to a healthy diet. Not only does it serve as a nutritious breakfast, but drinking juice instead of reaching for a soda is a better afternoon pick-me-up. If you hate the taste of veggies, juicing vegetables with your favorite fruit will disguise the taste and help you consume your daily prescribed intake. Slowly weaning your taste buds from fatty foods and massive amounts of sugar will turn cravings toward healthier foods. Eventually, your body will adapt to your new, healthy-conscious way

Last week's Mystery Citizen was correctly identified by Judi Currens, Lynn Overmyer, Virginia Brock, and Cynthia Bonine Goss, sharp-eyed readers who will enjoy free parking privileges as a reward for their skills. They recognized Jim Grover, a Culver High School grad perhaps most recognizable as the Culver fireman with the most longevity currently on the force (his son, Mike, has also

Late charge pushes Cavs past New Prairie

By Dee Grenert

CULVER — Culver Community’s Kayla Shaffer made the most of her reduced playing time Friday.

Beset by foul trouble throughout the evening, the junior forward still produced a game-high 16 points — six of those during a game-ending 10-0 run — as the Cavs pulled out a 38-29 come-from-behind victory over winless New Prairie in Northern State Conference girls basketball action at John R. Nelson Gymnasium.

“We’ve talked to (Shaffer) about how we’re not the same team when she’s not on the floor,” Culver head coach Gina Hierlmeier said. “We want her to be aggressive, but we want her to be smart about it. Tonight, even with the fourth foul, I thought she played a lot smarter.”

Shaffer kicked off the outcome-deciding 10-0 spurt with a pair of free throws at the 2:59 mark of the fourth quarter to give Culver a 30-29 edge. She followed immediately with an intercepted pass near the timeline and converted her third steal and right-handed breakaway layup of the second half.

“She’s huge,” Hierlmeier said of Shaffer’s defense-in-offense output. “Defensively, she was able to get her hands on some balls and that led to easy baskets.”

Culver sophomore point guard Tatum Schultz chipped in eight points, seven rebounds, a game-leading six steals, and hit classmate Mickella Hardy for a bucket to put the Cavs up 34-29 with 1:21 to play and effectively seal the win.

“Tatum, I give her tons of credit,” Hierlmeier said. “She was in control of the game. She broke down the defense and set up her teammates. She’s been in foul trouble the last couple games, and tonight she stayed on the floor the entire game except when I took her out for a brief rest. With (Shaffer) and Tate on the floor, we’re a much better team.”

Also for the Cavs, Hardy chipped in eight points and a game-high nine rebounds. Her drop step from the right block off a feed from Donna Zehner handed Culver its first lead of the game, 26-25 with 7:28 to play in the fourth quarter.

Despite the strong finish, Culver scuffled out of the gate. New Prairie, playing four out with a baseline runner, raced to a 15-6 lead at the end of the first frame on the strength of a series of backdoor cuts and second-chance opportunities.

Culver, though, surrendered just 14 points over the final three stanzas and held the Cougars to 18 percent from the field and forced 19 turnovers during the same span. For the game, New Prairie coughed up the ball 26 times against Culver’s mix of man-to-man, full-court press, and second-half half-court trap.

“I thought we had a much better second half,” Hierlmeier said. “At halftime I challenged them to make a game of it. I thought they did that. The effort and intensity were definitely there in the second half.”

“In the first half, defensively we were trailing cuts and giving (New Prairie) second opportunities,” she added. “When we’re hitting shots we have a chance to switch up defenses, but we weren’t hitting shots. In the second half of the game we hit some shots and we were able to move into different defenses and get them out of the flow of their offense.”

Madison Cody led the Cougars with nine points and three steals. Brooke Kresca added six points, seven rebounds, and four steals for New Prairie.

Culver, which improves to 4-0 in the conference, heads to Triton Friday for a key battle between current NSC unbeaten.

Cougars beat Cavs

Trent Elliott scored 29 points with six rebounds, but it wasn’t enough to put Culver Community over the top in a 63-52 Northern State Conference loss at New Prairie Saturday.

Collin Stevens finished with seven points, four assists and three steals, and Micah Budzinski put up five points with seven rebounds as the Cavs struggled to find meaningful scoring behind Elliott’s game-high tally.

Culver slips to 6-3 overall with a 1-2 NSC mark. New Prairie saw three players in double figures as Dylan Cory finished with 14 and C.J. Kowalski and Jared Monhaut each notched 11 points. The Cougars moved to 1-1 in NSC play with a 5-4 overall mark.

the club when 126 youngsters were in attendance.

Audience member Ginny Munroe, board chair for the CBGC, noted Culver's program is in the top tree in the entire state of Indiana, in terms of percentage of students who are club members.

CBGC members are also receiving quality programming, Monnier said, asking of the 58,000 hours members spent there in 2012, "Where would that time be spent, if not for the club?"

Two thousand hours of homework time took place there last year; without the club, Monnier said, "Who knows if they would get it done?"

Indiana, he pointed out, is one of the most obese states in the U.S.

"A lot of kids, if they go home, will eat Happy Meals, watch TV, and play video games. So we feel it's important to get those kids active."

In 2012, CBGC members spent around 15,000 combined hours engaged in physical activity. The rest of their time, Monnier added, was spent in arts and crafts, technology learning, and character building activities.

The CBGC board held a retreat at Swan Lake resort near Plymouth in November, where participants were asked what their dreams are for the youth of Culver.

"Maybe one day we'll have our own facility," he said, adding, "Right now, we're so gracious to be housed in Culver Elementary School."

Another dream was securing ongoing financial sustainability, something he expects the board will discuss more with the public in coming months.

Monnier also described the new free tutoring program underway for CBGC members. At present, 15 or 16 youth are signed up for regular tutoring, which so far has been handled via a work-study partnership with nearby Ancilla College. Ancilla, he said, has been "really phenomenal" overall in its support of CBGC. Ancilla students recently offered a soccer clinic for CBGC members, and the college has been consistently supportive of the club during CBGC's annual auction and campaign.

So, too, has Culver Academies, Monnier explained, whether its hosting or helping fund the auction, or hosting club members for visits and activities on Academies grounds. The Culver community at large has been "a great support" as well, he said: besides rent-free space at the elementary school, Culver's town park doesn't charge the club for swimming during the summer.

The Culver Boys & Girls Club's summer program also grew "by leaps and bounds" last year, Monnier said, thanks in part to a Marshall County Community Foundation grant which facilitated expanded programming and more field trips. Attendance grew from 25 children per day, on average, in the summer of 2011, to 50 per day in 2012. The club is open 12 hours per day in the summertime, he noted.

"It's hard to teach passion," Monnier said of garnering ongoing volunteer support for the program, particularly in light of his own childhood experiences in the Boys & Girls Club, "but once you've experienced it, you share it."

The Culver Kiwanis Club presented Monnier with a $2,500 check towards the club.

Also during the meeting, Kiwanis president Trent Bennett shared news with members that Culver's Lake Fest will have increased visibility in the 2013 Indiana Festival Guide, copies of which he distributed to members. The guides are available at various locations around Culver.

Bridal fair featuring local vendors coming up Jan. 12

By Lydia Beers
Staff Writer

PLYMOUTH — Marshall County brides-to-be can expect red carpet treatment at Treat's annual Bridal Fair Jan. 12.

"The bridal fair was started with brides in mind, to give them a one-stop shop for their wedding," said Gary Treat, adding that this is the 23rd year for the Marshall County Bridal Fair.

The fair is at Christo's Banquet Center in Plymouth, and it's free for anybody to attend.

"The average bride has an entourage of about four people," noted Treat, "And the groom is welcome. There definitely will be men there, but the target market (for the event) is the bride. The bride will be identified at the door with a special ribbon, so that vendors can focus on her."

There will be about 25 vendors showcasing their wares at the fair, from caterers to wedding planners to florists.

Two style shows, at 12:30 and 2:30 p.m., will show brides the latest fashions in bridal gowns, bridesmaid Treat's can work with any bride's budget, said Treat's Bridal Shoppe manager Linda Shay.

"There's a lot of ways to keep prices down," said Shay. Treat's has full-time wedding consultants and seamstresses on staff to address any bride's question or concern.

The Bridal Fair is Jan. 12 from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m., at Christo's Banquet Center, 830 E. Lincolnway in Plymouth. With questions, call Treat's at 574-936-3669.

The fair is open house format, and no registration is necessary.

laria, and the dam was finally removed, by court order, in 1907. The Marshall County Historical Society still sells note cards with a drawing of the Zehner Mill at Wolf Creek.

There was, at least for a time, a Wolf Creek Post Office, along with a Methodist Church and a small store. Much of the property around the mill was, naturally enough, owned by members of the Zehner family, and pioneer names like Logan, Thompson and Brownlee also show up on old plat maps of the area. One of the other surnames found in the neighborhood, however, is Hand; and it is the Hand family that provides a direct connection to our own town. William J. Hand, the founder of the family, came to Marshall County in 1843, having married Sabrina Chapman in Cleveland, Ohio; they settled next door to the McDonald family and were parents of six children. The fifth of these, William E., eventually became the proprietor of a grocery in downtown Culver, on the site of the current park—the grocery store building having previously been the town schoolhouse.

Sometime—probably more than once—during the Civil War, this village of Wolf Creek was visited by one of a pair of young brothers who acted as traveling salesmen for cast iron stoves made by the McRearys (also brothers) of Springfield, Illinois. The salesmen brothers came from an Ohio family with four other siblings, but their father, a railroad contractor, apparently lost money in the 1850s, which led to the children who were able to striking out on their own and brought the brothers first to St. Louis and then to Springfield. The twenty-something salesman caught the eye of William's twenty-something sister, Jennie, and so on September 1, 1864, eight days before her 24th birthday, Emily Jane Hand married Henry Harrison Culver, at her parents' home in Wolf Creek.

of eating, and you may begin craving fresh fruit and vegetable juice instead of greasy fat and sugar-laden foods.

A friend of mine recently approached me testifying to his newfound beverage of choice—homemade juice. Instead of consuming a 12-pack or two during a given weekend, fresh squeezed juice has become his newfound drink. He feels lighter, healthier and more vibrant.

How much juice should you drink? A small child should drink around 6 oz. per day. Older children should consume between 8 and 16 oz., while teenagers and adults should drink around 20 oz. per day. Taking it with you to work to drink throughout the day, or within 10 minutes after working out are options that many people have incorporated into their daily regimen. Enjoy the benefits of fresh juices on a daily basis and you will soon notice energy levels improve in a short amount of time. Who knows, you may be more productive at work, more energetic at home and even happier during the long days of winter. The invention of juice is one of man's greatest contributions to healthy living.
