Dangerous Negligence.

Walter M. Knapp voices a protest to the Citizen against the failure of practically all automobilists to sound an alarm at the approach to road turns and crossings. According to Mr. Knapp, hardly a driver is to be found about here who complies with the state law in giving warning of his approach by horn or otherwise, and not a few accidents from failure have been narrowly averted. It is his belief that the matter of an alarm at such places is of greater importance than the campaign against the cut-out, which results only in discomfort to the hearer, while the approach of rapidly moving cars to a short turn at which no horn is sounded, is fruitful of much danger.

Sudden Death of Mrs. Rhoads.

The town was shocked on last Thursday noon to hear of the unexpected death of Mrs. Jesse Rhoads, who was stricken while preparing the family dinner and died in about fifteen minutes. Mrs. Rhoads, who had been in poor health for about a year, had apparently been gaining in strength and growing better during the last two weeks, and therefore her death came as a greater shock to her family and friends.

The immediate cause of her death was organic heart disease, but there were other complications that made her case a particularly pathetic one.

She leaves three children, a son of seventeen, a daughter several years younger, and an infant a few months old.

The bereaved husband and the motherless children have the sympathy of the entire community.

Funeral services were conducted in the Culver M. E. church Saturday, July 4, by the pastor, Rev. J. F. Kenrich, assisted by Rev. J. E. Young of the Evangelical church and Rev. A. J. Michael of the Reformed church. The ladies of the Degree of Pocahontas attended in a body and used the ritualistic burial service of that order at the grave in Burr Oak cemetery. Among the beautiful flowers were tributes from the Pocahontas lodge and the M. E. Ladies Aid. The music was furnished by the members of the M. E. church choir. The pall bearers were Urias Mense, H. J. Meredith, A. A. Keen, Charles Burch, Earl Zechiel and William Houghton.

Friends and relatives from away who attended the funeral were: Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Rhoads, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Anglin, Christ, Stanley, W. E. Rhoads, and Mrs. Mary Templeton of Argos; Mrs. Frances Kraus of South Chicago; Mr. and Mrs. Roy McGuire of Hobart; Miss Moorehouse of Mishawaka; B. C. Rhoads and family of Walworth, Wis., I. C. Brooke of Tyner; Mr. and Mrs. Art Wike of South Bend.

THE WEEK IN CULVER

Little Items of Local Happenings of Interest to People in Town and Country

—A pretty feature of the fire works around the lake Saturday night was the simultaneous lighting at a pre-arranged gun signal, of the effective red fire on the shore at about forty cottages.

—The dry weather in June seriously affected the red raspberry crop in this vicinity. One market gardner stated that the crop would not be a quarter of what the bushes were set to bear before the dry spell.

—Plymouth has received its new curfew bell, which is to be hung in the tower of the engine house. The bell will be rung at a quarter to 9 o'clock, and after 9 o'clock no children under 16 years of age will be allowed on the streets unaccompanied by parent or guardian.

—Quarantine for diphtheria was removed from the home of John Gast of Plymouth, a former resident of Culver, last week. Mrs. Gast's death has broken up the home. The two boys will find a home with their grandparents in Bourbon, and the baby is cared for by a Plymouth lady.

—The banks of beautiful Maxinkuckee afford many a rare picnicking spot, but on the Fourth a party of about twenty-five strangers preferred to eat their patriotic sandwiches and fried chicken on a terrace in the business part of town. Well, everyone to his taste! What's Independence day good for if you can't eat your picnic dinner where you like, regardless of popular prejudice?

—The Honeywell evangelistic meetings in Argos which closed last week have resulted in 325 conversions, and, according to the Reflector, "enmities, hatreds, bitter rivalries and animosities have been dissolved and vanished in the common crucible of christian grace." The offerings on the last Sunday, Dr. Honeywell's portion of the pecuniary receipts of the meetings, amounted to $850.

—Week before last Major Hervey Bates' cottage was broken into and an automatic pistol and a watch and fob were taken, the burglar evidently being frightened away before he could secure more plunder. Last week Tuesday Marshal Vanmeter found the watch in the suit case of Julius Carter, a colored waiter at the Palmer House, who confessed to having stolen the things. He was taken before Judge Voreis who bound him over to the circuit court.

—Between 80 and 90 people attended the Miller-Voreis reunion at Maxinkuckee lake Sunday, June 28. T. E. Hoover of South Bend, the president, and J. M. Wickizer made addresses, and a program of recitations and impromptu remarks was carried out. J. A. Runner of Indianapolis was chosen president for the ensuing year. Elkhart, St. Joseph and Marshall counties, and Indianapolis and Logansport were represented. The next reunion will be held June 29, 1915, at Argos.

—Culver's Ministerial alliance went huckleberrying last Thursday. It was an entirely unofficial and unpremeditated function of that body, as none of its members knew the others were going, but it is understood that all enjoyed the occasion and the rare beauty of the day, even if the berries were somewhat few and far between. One of the gentlemen is reported to have said that it was a most profitable day, for he had "gathered $5 cents worth of berries and $4.15 worth of good-time."

CHAPTER XXIV.
The Price of Wisdom.

It was the evening of the second day after Gavin Ord and his friend Arthur Kenyon had dined together in the Hotel Moskova at Bukharest. A railway and twelve hours' abuse of its tardiness had carried them a stage upon this journey. Willing Hungarian ponies, mules, in whose eyes the negative virtues might be read, brought them to the foot of the mountains and left them there to camp with what luxury they might. Attended by a sleek Turk they had discovered in the Capital, their escort boasted no less than four heroes of the line—for this had been Cecil Chesny's unalterable determination, that they should not go to the mountains alone.

"It's a fool's errand and may be dangerous," said he; "these soldiers are thieves, but they will see that no one else robs you. I will ask the Ministry to pick out as good specimens as he can. Don't complain when you see them. They are much less harmless than they look."

Gavin did not like the business at all, but as Chesny's good-will was necessary to the expedition, he put up with it, and the four shabby soldiers accompanied him from Bukharest. They were ill-mannered fellows enough, raw-boned, high-cheeked, sallow-faced ruffians, whose "paradise snow" could be found wherever good, comely, plump girls and bad tobacco might be found. Their energy at meal times became truly prodigious. They were as ravenous wolves, seeking what they might devour; and, as Arthur Kenyon remarked, they would have eaten his boots if he had taken them off.

Now, this pretty company, Englishmen, Roumanians, a Greek and a Turk, encamped in the woods together upon the evening of the second day, and found what comfort they could beneath the sheltering leaves of a spacious beech. It had been Gavin's intention to put up at a guest-house named by the guide-book he had purchased in Vienna; but when they came to the place where the inn should have stood, they discovered nothing but charred ruins and cimmerous relics; and, "by all the gods," said Arthur Kenyon, "the red cock has crowed here before us." A romantic ear would have listened greedily at such a time to the guide's tales of border pleasantries—girls carried shrieking to the mountains, roofs blazing, priests burned in their holy odes, babes hoist on bayonets—for such they would have made a simple affair in which a drunken herdsman and a paraffin lamp had figured notably; but Gavin was in no mood for narratives, and he sent them to the right about, one for wood, another for water, a third to hunt a cot or homestead, if such were to be discovered.

"The Hotel of the Belle Etoile after all," he said gloomily; "well, it might have been worse, Arthur."

"Just so. If I had not stocked your order at Slavtsei, you would now be doing what the amiable Foulon advised the French people to do a hundred years ago—eating hay with relish, my dear boy. Well, there's red wine strong enough to poison White Bull, and maize bread tough enough for a guinea set of ready-made grinders, to say nothing of cheese, sausage, and biscuits. Fall on, Macduff, and eat enough!"

He frivelled on as young men will, not without purpose, for Gavin's anxiety was potent to all about him. It had seemed an easy thing in England to visit the near East and learn for himself the simple truth of Georges Odin's fate. Here on the slopes of the mountains he began to understand his difficulties, perhaps the danger, of his pursuit. For this, he remembered, had been the scene of Robert Forrester's youth, this the home of Zalony, the revolutionary brigand upon whose head three countries had set a price. Time had not changed the disposition of the mountain people, nor had civilization influenced its social creeds. Beware of Zalony's gypsies, they had said to him at Bukharest. This night had brought him within a post of his goal. It would be hard enough if any mischance should send him back to England empty-handed; to say to Evelyn, "I have failed; I can tell you nothing."

Arthur Kenyon, for his part, had begun to enjoy the whole adventure amazingly. Especially he liked the four merry soldiers who ate and drank as though they had been fasting and astringent for a week, and lay down afterwards to fall instantly to sleep. In this the Greek muleteer and the Turkish robber of all trades imitated them without loss of time; so that by nine o'clock nothing but the red glow of two English pipes and the sonorous nasal thank-offerings of the sleepers would have betrayed the camp or its occupants. Such conversation as passed between Gavin and Arthur was in fitful whispers, the talk of men thoroughly fatigued and wistful for the day. They, too, dropped to sleep over it at last, and when they awoke it was to such a scene as neither would ever forget, however long he might live.

Gavin slept without dreaming, the first night he had done so since he left England. He could remember afterwards that his friend's voice awoke him from his heavy slumber; and that, when he sat up and stared about him, Arthur Kenyon was the first person his eyes rested upon. Instantly, as one sees a picture in a vision, the scene of the camp presented itself to his view—the great trunks of the oaks and beeches, the hollow, wherein the horses were tethered, the tangle of grass and undergrowth, the just as he had seen it when he fell asleep, so the reddening embers of the camp-fire showed it to him now—unchanged, and yet how different! He was, for this brief instant, as a sleeper who wakes in a familiar room and wonders why he has been awakened. Then, just as rapidly, the scales fell from his eyes and he knew.

Arthur Kenyon stood with his back against the trunk of a beech, his revolver drawn and about him such a motley crowd that only a comic opera could have reproduced it. Gypsies chiefly, the fire-light flashed upon sallow faces which a man might see in an evil dream; upon arms that a medieval age should have forged; upon limbs that forest labor had trained to hardness. Crying together in not unmusical exclamations, the raiders appeared in no way desirous of injuring their man, but only of disarming him. One of their number lay prone already, hugging a wound thigh and muttering imprecations which should have brought the heavens upon his head—a second had the Englishman by the legs and would not be beaten off; while of the rest, the foremost aimed heavy blows at the extended pistol and demanded its delivery in sonorous German. Such was the scene which the picture presented to Gavin as he awoke. He was on his feet before the full meaning of it could be comprehended.

"Halt!" he cried, for lack of any other word to serve. His tone, his manner, drew all eyes toward him. "What do you want?" he continued, with the same air of authority. Twenty voices answered him, but he could make nothing of their reply. He was about to speak for the third time when rough hands pinioned his arms and feet from behind and instantly deprived him of the power to move a step from the place where he stood.

"To conduct your excellency to the Castle of Okna—we have come for that, excellency."

"You are aware that I am an Englishman?"

The gypsy pointed smilingly to his wounded friend.

"We are perfectly aware of it, excellency."

"Then you know the consequences of that which you are doing?"

"Pardon, excellency—there are no consequences in the mountains. Let your friend be wise and put up his pistol. We shall shoot him if he does not."

Gavin, doubting the nature of the situation no longer, shrugged his shoulders and invited Kenyon by a gesture to put up his pistol.

"We can do nothing, Arthur, let them have their way."

"I beg your pardon, Gavin; I could make holes in two or three of them."

"It would not help us. They are evidently only agents. Let's hear what the principal has to say."

"Very well, if you think so. It's poor fun, though—almost like shooting sheep in the Highlands. But, of course, I bow to wisdom."

He held out his hands to the gypsy who bound them immediately with a leather thong taken from the saddle-bow of the excellent pony he had ridden. Silently and methodically now, the men secured their prisoners and produced their gyves of heavy rope. To resist would have been just that madness which Gavin named it—and but for Evelyn the scene had been one to jest at.

"Do you treat all your guests at the Castle of Okna in this way?" he asked the leader of the men suddenly.

The reply was delivered with a suavely delightful to hear.

"When they come to us with soldiers and Turks, then we speak plainly to them, excellency."

"True, I had forgotten the soldiers. Where are those noble men now?"

"Half way back to Slavtsei, excellency."

"And the muleteer?"

"Oh, my friends are warning his feet for him. We are not fond of Greeks, here in the mountains, excellency."

Gavin started as the man spoke, for a wild shriek broke upon his ears and becoming louder until it sounded like some supreme cry of human agony, ended at last in a fearful sobbing, as it were the weeping of a child in pain. When he dared to look, he saw the gypsies had dragged the wretched Greek to the camp-fire and pouring oil from a can upon his bare feet, they thrust them into the flames and held them there with that utter indifference to human suffering which, above all others, is the characteristic of the people of the Balkans. Working in their embrace, his eyes starting from his head, his voice paralyzed by the fearful cries he raised, the wretched man suddenly fainted and lay inanimate in the flame. Then, and not until then, they drew him back and left him quivering upon the green grass.

"He was warned," the gypsy leader muttered sullenly; "he should have known better."

But Arthur, showing Gavin his bleeding wrists, said with a shrug: "I think very little of wisdom, Gavin."

The rope had cut the flesh almost to the bone in his efforts to go to the help of the wretched Greek.

Chautauqua's Success.

The first annual Chautauqua has come and gone, and so thoroughly pleased were the patrons that nearly 700 tickets were sold Saturday night in fifteen minutes for 1915.

The Lincoln Chautauqua System has become nation-wide in its scope, and is doing work for good government, for the advancement of sound religion and all forms of social science that was no longer possible with political parties and churches. Why? Because it brings together the intelligent, right-intentioned people of the community and shows them that they are after all of one flesh and blood, and of one interest and mind. Quietly but effectively the Chautauqua eliminates class prejudice, partisan prejudice, and sectarian bias. And the good Lord knows that these things have served for centuries to divide men into hostile factions, and thus have darkened their counsel, weakened their strength and always defeated the people in their noblest purposes.

The program presented by the Lincoln Chautauqua brought here artists, musicians, scientists, sociologists, men and women of national repute, and has given those men free right of way to express their thought and their purpose.

Clinton can never again be what it was. Gone are the narrow, petty persecutions for principle's sake. The old order has passed. Its shackles are shattered. The Chautauqua did it, and to those citizens of all parties and all religions who personally backed the enterprise, is due all the great credit for having performed the task. From now on it will be a matter of growth and development. The seed of a new plant has been planted in this city, and already in its first tiny leaves may be read the sign of a greater and a better city, toleration of others' opinions, a stronger general desire to learn the truth, and to get right action of public service and co-operation.

It is not the work of a corporation. It is not for private gain. All the proceeds go into a trust fund for the still greater improvement of the work hereafter and for better facilities. It should in time become strong enough to own its own auditorium.—Clinton Saturday Argus.

Took Poison by Mistake.

Lee Wade, an instructor in the Woodcraft department of the Culver Summer schools, is in Wesley hospital, Chicago, with small chances of recovery as the result of accidentally taking a bichloride of mercury tablet.

On Thursday night, after retiring in his tent, Mr. Wade remembered that he had intended to take a laxative tablet, and reaching to the shelf above took down the bottle which he supposed contained the laxative tablets. In about 20 minutes he began to vomit, and knowing that something was wrong made his way to the hospital where Dr. Hammond, the interne on night duty, diagnosed the symptoms as poisoning and administered the proper remedy. Wade's tent was then inspected and the cause of his sickness was discovered. His father, Dr. Francis H. Wade, a practicing physician in Cambridge, Mass., was at once notified by long distance phone, and accompanied by his wife Dr. Wade started for Culver the next morning.

On Sunday night a special train was ordered from Logansport and the patient was hurried to Chicago for an operation on the kidneys, the organs which are most seriously affected by bichloride of mercury.

There is absolutely no question that the young man's action was accidental, as the circumstances conclusively show. When leaving home he hastily placed in his suitcase the bottle which he thought contained laxative tablets. In his haste he did not look at the label, and in size and form the two preparations are similar. Young Wade was enthusiastic in his work at the school, and of a happy disposition. He is 23 years of age and unmarried.

Colored Waiter Drowned.

Joe Collier, a colored waiter at the Lake View hotel, drowned in an attack of cramps, while swimming in the lake with Arlington Saunders, another waiter, on Friday afternoon. He started to cross from the sailboat pier to the depot pier and had gone hardly 20 feet when Saunders, hearing his cries for help, swam to him in time to see him sink to the bottom of the lake. Saunders made several attempts to rescue him, but failed. Murel Ganger then plunged, all dressed, into the water to help him, but his clothing was so heavy and the weight of Collier's body so great that he could not move it. By this time Sam Belt had come with a row boat and the three managed to get the body aboard and rowed to the pier where they had worked over it only a few minutes when Major Greiner and Walter Haud arrived with the academy pulmotor. This was used for a long time, but without success. Life had evidently passed from the body before it was taken from the lake.

The body was shipped to Washington, Ind., where Collier's parents live, on Saturday evening by Undertaker Easterday.

P. W. Haag has sold his interest in the livery and garage near the depot to his partner, D. L. Miller.

Obituary.

Lucy Ann Rhoads, the second daughter of Michael and Lavina Baker, was born in Union township, Marshall county, Ind., near Culver, thirty-eight years ago the 26th of last June. Her early life was mostly spent in the home of her parents on the farm. She was married to J. W. Rhoads December 12, 1896. To them, three children were born to grace the home. They are Phocian C., Bertha May and Herman Wayne; all of whom are living. They resided for a time in Hibbard and in Plymouth before taking up their permanent home in Culver fourteen years ago.

Eight or nine years ago, she accepted Jesus as her only Savior and united with the Culver M. E. church. She was faithful in her church relations and endeavored to live a true life in the faith. Her greatest desire was that her family be in the church and that they be faithful to the teachings of the meek and lowly Jesus.

She passed away from this life suddenly but peacefully Thursday, July 2, just before midday. She leaves her husband, one daughter and two sons, a sister, four brothers, and a host of sympathizing friends to mourn her departure.

On the Wing.

One feature of the Fourth noted by town observers was the unrest of those who visited the lake in automobiles. A car would draw up beside the curb, or in some shady spot, the occupants would hop out, look around a little, hop back into the car and whiz off in search of fresh fields and pastures new. This was observed, not in a few cases, but in many, and Culver was not the only place where the motor car microbe, that keeps its victims continually on the wing, was showing its activity. One member of a party of Culver motorists who enjoyed a strenuous day's trip that included visits to the Lake of the Woods, Pretty lake, Twin Lakes, and Bass lake, said that the same uneasy spirit was in evidence at all these places. Automobiles would rush up to the resort, the people would get out, walk about for a few minutes, pile back into the car, then rush away. And to think that this uneasy, wild flying over hot and dusty roads is going on all over the United States—in fact over all of the civilized and many of the uncivilized countries of the world—during the motoring season. Verily, the motor car has set the whole world on the wing.

A Neighborhood Enterprise.

From an unsightly heap of ashes and old tin cans, the little triangle adjoining the Vandalia right of way at the south side of the foot of Washington street has been transformed into a tiny park, blooming with flowers. The Arthur Morris, the John Cromleys and the Overmans are responsible for this pleasing change. They cleared up the spot, Mr. Cromley hauled some good earth on to it, the ladies planted and cared for the flowers, and behold, "the desert blossomed as a rose."

This is an excellent demonstration of the good results that can be accomplished when people are interested in improving village conditions, and willing to go ahead and do something, even if that something isn't especially their business any more than others. This tiny flower park is evidence of a fine civic spirit.

Stricken With Apoplexy.

Mr. McDaniel, an aged cottager from Lebanon, was taken home yesterday, suffering from a light stroke of apoplexy. He was attacked after being out on the lake in the hot sun a few days ago.

Base Ball Dope.

The game between the Plymouth Busy Bees and Culver, which was played on the Fourth, resulted in a score of 22 to 2. Culver was too much for the Plymouth boys and the Busy Bees quit in the sixth inning.

Selling the Bottom of the Lake.
Last week, according to the Plymouth Democrat, the recorder of deeds of Marshall county received the third letter which has come to his office during the last fifteen months, from parties in the East, concerning a certain described 180 acres in section 27, township 32 in Marshall county, which has been offered for sale. This land lies at the bottom of Maxinkuckee lake, although the described parcels are on the sectional map of Marshall county. One of the letters sent to the recorder inclosed a deed covering this description, which the writer sent to have recorded.

The scheme is, of course, some kind of a swindle.
—The street sprinkler began its voyage of mercy last week, and now the good Culver housewives feel that they may lay aside their dusting cloths for at least a part of each day.
